Missouri laced with Dioxin dumps

By GREGORY GORDON
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Dioxin, the most toxic ingredient of the Vietnam-era defoliant Agent Orange, is believed present in 25 to 50 sites in Missouri. It has been detected in several locations at levels higher than at Love Canal.

Another 48 pounds of the substance — believed to be the strongest potential cancer-causer made by man, and which can be lethal in minute amounts — was hauled across the state by an oil salvage operator and is unaccounted for, United Press International has learned.

The non-profit Environmental Defense Fund Wednesday released internal Environmental Protection Agency documents it said show the Reagan administration is considering a "repugnant" response to what has become a major, long-term health problem.

EPA won't clean up PCB dumps — A12

The memos indicate EPA is considering cleanup actions that would leave the cancer-causing agent in soil at levels 10,000 to 100,000 times higher than levels following the government-run cleanup at the much-publicized toxic waste site at Love Canal near Buffalo, N.Y.

An EPA enforcement attorney wrote in one memo that leaving such a high level would amount to using humans as guinea pigs and would have broad ramifications for the agency's handling of less dangerous carcinogens.

The environmental group noted that at concentrations of 50 parts per billion, half as strong as those being considered as permissible, EPA's own risk assessment data conclude the average person's chances of getting cancer increases to at least 1 in 10,000.

"We're talking about levels in Missouri of two to twenty times that," said Ellen Silbergeld, the group's chief toxicologist.

A UPI investigation disclosed that EPA has known since early summer about a number of the contaminated sites, including three horse arenas and a residential area outside St. Louis, but failed to order extensive sampling until recent weeks.

"Two weeks ago, EPA started a sampling program in several areas in Missouri and at this time we are not prepared to make any decision on levels of dioxin," Byron Nelson, chief EPA spokesman, said late Tuesday.

Nelson said studying various options is "standard practice in the agency and it should not be an indication of where a dioxin level will be set."

But one EPA option memo, which suggested a stringent cleanup level in preliminary actions, said an advantage of such a move "allows preparation of the public for possible change in policy."

"We're still assessing how serious it is," said Rita Lavelle, assistant EPA administrator.

She said she only learned of the high levels of dioxin at the horse arenas and residential areas during a meeting on Sept. 14, and no decision has been made on whether it is an emergency priority.

"We determined it not to be," Ms. Lavelle said. "We determined it to be something we need more data on."

EPA officials have told UPI 12 pounds of dioxin were traced to at least 14 confirmed sites and 41 "potential" sites in Missouri. EPA sources said dioxin has been confirmed at a number of the "potential" sites, some of which are clustered together and include several St. Louis trucking companies.

Federal and state officials have yet to account for 48 pounds of the chemical, which was mixed into 18,500 gallons of waste oil and hauled around the state by a salvage operator a decade ago.

EPA officials confirm they probably will be trying to trace the missing dioxin for years because the trucker, Russell Bliss of Rosati, Mo., cannot remember how he disposed of all the oil.

Judge recommends removing 1080 ban

By The Times-News
and United Press International

TWIN FALLS — An administrative law judge has recommended the partial lifting of a 10-year-old ban on the use of poison Compound 1080, which is used to kill coyotes, the federal Environmental Protection Agency announced Wednesday.

But Guy Connolly, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service researcher who is stationed in Twin Falls, said he doubts the chemical will receive EPA registration soon, other than for controlled tests. And sheep ranchers contend the judge's ruling doesn't go far enough.

Compound 1080 (sodium fluoroacetate) was banned by the EPA for use on coyotes because it was considered a threat to humans and because it kills animals other than coyotes, including endangered species such as the California condor.

The poison remains in use to kill rodents such as prairie dogs, moles and ground squirrels.

Judge Spencer Nissen's 160-page ruling concluded that the EPA should permit use of the highly lethal substance under two strictly controlled conditions:

- In toxic collars attached to the necks of sheep. The collars release 1080 when a predator bites through them into its prey. Tests using toxic collars have been conducted in Idaho and Texas.
- In "single lethal-dose" baits, handled only by state or federal employees, and never in concentrations greater than two baits per square mile.

Despite contentions by ranchers, Nissen said there is no evidence that "overall losses of sheep or lambs to predators have increased" since 1080 was banned. But he said that for individual ranchers, coyotes and other predators remain a significant cause of losses.

Nissen's decision came after months of hearings. If the ruling is appealed, EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch has 30 to 50 days to decide whether to modify the decision or let it stand.

Connolly heads a research team that is studying the use of 1080 in toxic collars, and recently, it received permission

Attack of U.N. checkpoint leaves 3 Irish soldiers dead

By United Press International

Gunmen using automatic weapons ambushed a checkpoint of the United Nations peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon Wednesday, killing three Irish soldiers and leaving a fourth in shock, officials said. The unknown assailants escaped.

The ambush occurred north of the village of Tibnine, 9 miles west of the Israeli border. The region is controlled by the Israeli-backed militia of renegade Lebanese Maj. Saad Haddad.

Before Israel's June 6 invasion removed the PLO from its bases in southern Lebanon, Haddad frequently accused the U.N. force of cooperating with the Palestinians.

The Irish soldiers were part of the 6,500-man United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, stationed on the Lebanese side of the border with Israel since 1978.

The U.N. force is not part of the 3,500-man tri-national force of U.S., French and Italian soldiers deployed in Beirut.

U.N. spokesmen in Naqoura, Lebanon, and New York said a search for the attackers was under way.

They said the attackers drove up to the checkpoint about 8:40 p.m. local time. Two men got out, sprayed the checkpoint with automatic weapons fire and fled after killing three soldiers.

"A fourth Irish soldier is suffering from shock," a spokesman for the Irish army said in Dublin. He said the wounded and slain soldiers were assigned to the 51st and 52nd Battalions.

Symms rips magazine story, says Time took 'cheap shot'

SEN. STEVE SYMMS
Denies being bought

BOISE (UPI) — Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, labeled as a "cheap shot" Wednesday a magazine article that implied he is in the pocket of industries that want to decimate the Clean Air Act.

The Idaho Republican told reporters attending a Boise news conference that latest issue of Time Magazine wrongly accuses him of offering weakening amendments to the environmental law — and doing it at the behest of the industry that contributed $97,500 to his 1980 campaign against former Democratic Sen. Frank Church.

"That's a cheap shot, and it's not true," Symms said after being read the paragraphs pertaining to him.

He said a quotation from an unnamed senator indicating Symms didn't even know what was contained in the amendments he offered in committee was untrue, noting that he was aware of the contents of those proposal.

Symms also said the implication that he's been "bought and paid for" by political action committees from industries affected by the Clean Air Act also is unfair.

"I was running to beat Frank Church, and he had a $2 million campaign chest," Symms said. "We took money from anybody in the country who wanted to contribute to us as long as it was legal."

The Time article, which dealt with the methods and influence of Political Action committees, said that Symms "dutifully introduced one industry amendment after another," to weaken the Clean Air Act. It goes on to say that, "Members of his committee even privately mocked him, asking 'Which campaign check had that amendment attached to it?'"

Raking 'em in

Raking leaves is one chore Lorn Price of Twin Falls enjoys. Price prefers to be outside — either tending to the garden at his Third Avenue North home or doing odd jobs around the yard. Wednesday's fair weather provided good conditions for fall chores, but clouds and rain are expected today.

Reagan slaps sanctions on Poles

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan signed a proclamation Wednesday suspending special trade status for Poland in retaliation for continued repression by that country's Soviet-backed military regime.

The action, formally taken under provisions of a protocol to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, suspends most favored nation status that Poland has enjoyed on a permanent basis for two decades.

"The Polish martial law government has taken steps further to increase its repression of the Polish people by outlawing the independent trade union Solidarity, leaving the United States without any reason to continue withholding action on its trade complaints against Poland," Reagan said in the proclamation.

Poland is the only Warsaw Pact nation that has had most favored nation status on a permanent basis. Suspension of the status will raise duties and tariffs on a range of exported goods.

Reagan announced last month that he was taking the action in response to a further crackdown on Solidarity by the Polish parliament, but at the time did not know whether it would require congressional action.

White House aides said the Trade Act of 1974 permits the president to suspend special trade status if he finds that a GATT signatory has not lived up to requirements of the trade agreements, and that congressional approval is not needed.

The Senate Finance Committee said Reagan has the authority, under Section 125 of the Trade Act of 1974, to unilaterally cut off special trade status to a country. "No congressional imput is necessary," said a committee spokesman.

The only way Congress could override the president's decision would be to pass another law giving special trade status to Poland — an unlikely event.

Union official says Bunker Hill sold

COEUR D'ALENE (UPI) — A United Steelworkers of America official said Wednesday he expects an announcement soon that the Bunker Hill Co. lead and zinc smelters have been purchased by an Idaho group.

But the same union official questioned the political timing of the expected announcement of the sale.

The Bunker Hill smelters and mine were closed earlier this year, putting nearly 2,000 employees out of work, but rumors have persisted about a possible purchase of the company and a reopening of the smelters.

"In the last few days there have been widespread reports that the Bunker Hill properties have been sold," said Laverne Melton, administrator of Steelworkers Local 7854 in Kellogg, Idaho.

"It only remains now for an announcement to be made, which would confirm these widespread reports," Melton said. "We are at a loss to understand why anyone would want to withhold such good news, and we hope that the parties involved will relieve the anxiety of the people in the Silver Valley area and Idaho by making an appropriate announcement as early as possible."

Melton said his contention about an imminent Bunker Hill sale is based partly on the fact that Coeur d'Alene newspaper publisher Duane Hagadone has formed a new corporation.

Hagadone had been involved nearly a year ago in an unsuccessful attempt by a group of Idaho businessmen to purchase Bunker Hill from Gulf Resources and Chemical Corp. of Houston.

Melton also cited a Boise newspaper advertisement in which Rep. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, indicated that success is pending in an effort to restore 1,000 jobs at Bunker Hill.

"I've been told that for maximum political impact, the announcement is timed for this Friday," Melton said. "Additionally, in an attempt to promote the campaign of Congressman Larry Craig, he is to be the one to make the announcement.

Revere Copper files Chapter 11

NEW YORK (UPI) — Revere Copper & Brass Co. said Wednesday it has filed to reorganize under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Act because of the losses of its aluminum operations.

Revere's aluminum reduction plant at Scottsboro, Ala., was shut down in June for an indefinite period.

President William Collins said Revere's losses have been in primary aluminum production and rolling operations.

Collins said the company's aluminum extrusion and fabricating businesses, including kitchen ware and copper and brass fabricating business, are doing well and the purpose of the petition under Chapter 11 is to protect these businesses.

Economy causing abortions

NEW YORK (UPI) — Fifty-three percent of the women interviewed in a new study cited financial reasons as the most important factor in the decision to have an abortion — almost twice as many as a year ago, a New York women's health center reported Wednesday.

The new study, as the one last year which found 28 percent blaming financial reasons, was done at for CHOICES center in conjunction with Adelphi University and Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York.

Two hundred women were surveyed over a six-month period.

The second most common reason listed as most important was a "career," while emotional, school and medical reasons were cited by only 6.5 percent.

"Because of the reality of the economy, many women are sacrificing their desire for children," said Merle Hoffman, social psychologist and director of CHOICES.

"The Reagan Administration's economic policies must be viewed as having a direct effect on abortions in this country, now over 1.5 million a year."

DeLorean may be out Friday

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Automaker John DeLorean, arrested while allegedly trying to finance a $24 million cocaine deal to save his failing sports car company, will remain jailed in lieu of $5 million bail until Friday, his lawyer said Wednesday.

Attorney Joseph Ball gave the new release deadline after he and DeLorean's wife, New York fashion model Cristina Ferrare, visited the flamboyant entrepreneur late Wednesday afternoon at the Terminal Island federal prison.

Ball told reporters Tuesday he had reached an agreement with prosecutors on how to secure bail and predicted his client would get out of jail in "a day or two." On Wednesday he said he had not yet reached "a final agreement" and said the automaker would apparently have to spend two more nights behind bars.

"I think it looks very favorable that Mr. DeLorean will be released around Friday," he said. Asked if he might be let out before then, he replied, "On Friday. I think it will be Friday."

Europe crops to set record

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The European Economic Community is expected to harvest a record grain crop in 1982 of about 122.5 million tons, the Agriculture Department reported Wednesday.

Such a harvest would be 3 million tons above the so-called "guaranteed threshhold" of 119.5 million tons fixed for the 1982-1983 marketing year and could possibly trigger a 3 percent drop in EEC support prices for grains in 1983-1984.

According to reforms adopted by the EEC in last May, grain support prices will be reduced by 1 percent for each million tons over 119.5 million. That reduction goes into effect that year after such production levels.

In a related development, the department said because of the favorable weather that prevailed throughout southeastern Europe, Yugoslavia is expected to harvest a record corn crop this year.

to conduct tests with small baits in select areas of Idaho, Montana and Texas.

The small baits would use food-smell attractants, he said, and would be hidden from the view of eagles and other wildlife.

Connolly said he had not seen the judge's order, but that it is possible that groups on both sides of the issue will appeal the judge's ruling.

Sheep ranchers had hoped for approval to use 1080 in poison-laced carcasses, thereby potentially killing more than one coyote. In large-bait uses, the chemical is diluted in an effort to avoid killing birds and smaller mammals.

Stan Boyd, the executive director of the Idaho Wool Growers Association, said single-dose baits do not work in areas with significant snowfall, and that baited collars are expected to cost $8 apiece — even when mass-produced.

"Multiply that times thousands of sheep and it becomes prohibitive," Boyd said.

The theory behind toxic-collar use is that it kills only coyotes that attack livestock. But Marv Cronberg of Utah, the president of the National Wool Growers Association, said the technique often leads to sheep losses even if a coyote is killed.

Idaho lost an estimated 28,900 sheep to predators in 1981, according to figures presented by Maurice Guerry, the president of the Idaho Wool Growers. Guerry said the figure was obtained from the Idaho Crop and Livestock Reporting Service.

Several environmental groups, including Defenders of Wildlife and the National Audubon Society, oppose any relaxation of the ban.

The Audubon Society said it does not oppose shooting or trapping of coyotes, but it objects to the poison because of its potential impact on wildlife.

The judge concluded that alternative means of predator control are not consistently effective or available at reasonable cost.

Nissen said the "possibility of secondary poisoning cannot be ruled out" for animals other than predators. But he said that if the poison is restricted to toxic collars and baited meat, it "does not pose a significant risk to non-target wildlife."

The states of Texas, Wyoming, South Dakota and Montana had entered the case on behalf of the ranchers, along with the U.S. Interior Department and the American Farm Bureau Federation.

U.N. spokesman Joe Sills said U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar expressed "shock and sorrow" and offered his condolences to the Irish government and the families of the soldiers.

Since its inception, 86 UNIFIL troops have been killed, 16 of them Irish. An Irish soldier abducted April 28, 1981, is still missing.

There were 642 Irish soldiers in the U.N. force as of last week. The Security Council, which formed UNIFIL following Israel's 1978 invasion of Lebanon, had recently extended the peace force operation until Jan. 19, 1983.

In Beirut, U.S. envoy Morris Draper returned to resume Washington's drive to negotiate the withdrawal by year's end of 70,000 Israeli, 25,000 Syrian and an estimated 10,000 Palestinian fighters from Lebanon.

Earlier, U.N. officials in New York and Vienna released a report confirming Israeli allegations that PLO fighters used a U.N. school in Lebanon for nearly two years to provide weapons and explosives training to Palestinian students.

A spokesman for the U.S. Mission to the United Nations said the United States was holding up $15 million of its $62 million contribution for 1982 to the U.N. Relief and Work's Agency as a result of the report.

Economist calls supply side gimmick

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan said Wednesday there is sunshine on the economic horizon, but a Nobel Prize-winning economist visiting the White House declared the nation in a depression and branded supply-side economic theory "a gimmick."

"There is some sunshine on the horizon," Reagan told a group of small business leaders visiting the White House — adding that they "can make a drastic reduction in this recession" by backing his efforts.

Reagan promised that "millions of more people" will be able to afford homes and there will be "more jobs to come."

But economist George Stigler, standing at a White House podium, branded the supply-side economic theory backed by Reagan "a gimmick."

After a separate meeting with the president, Stigler shunned the term "recession" and said the nation is still "bumping along" in a depression.

The University of Chicago economist did, however, say there are signals that "we are on our way up."

Stigler said it only "linguistics" to call the state of the economy a recession.

"I'm so old that I remember depressions. I know they're not polite and probably are forbidden to be spoken in the city limits of Washington, D.C.," he said. "I don't mind changing words."

"I think we're bumping along and we're on our way up," he said. "I believe in things like the stock market ... as a predicter of the business revival."

Asked about the so-called supply-side theory, Stigler said it "is not an orthodox economic category. It's a gimmick, or a slogan that was used to package certain ideas. And that's all right, I think sloganeering is one of the largest products of this town."

UPI photo

Reagan chats with George Stigler at the White House

Stigler, who described himself an "apolitical Republican," won the Nobel Price recently for his work on public regulation and government controls.

At a press room podium following his meeting with the president, Stigler said supply-side theory "had a thesis that clearly had a great deal of sense in it" — that burdening business with "a series of cost-increasing obstacles" will discourage production.

"Supply siders, by saying let's cut down on lots of taxes, let's cut down on some regulations which do substantially increase the costs of production, were performing a service," he explained. "Where they went too far was in claiming so much for it, and saying that if we do that, that alone will take care of inflation and things like that."

Stigler said he told the president deregulation should only come when times and needs demand it and not necessarily by presidential imperative.

"It would seem to me to be doctrinaire to go down the line and say 'Let's abolish everything in the government except the Air Force," Stigler said. "I'm prepared to believe that almost almost any deeply entrenched persistent policy serves important purposes."

Associate believes Mulcahy murdered

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A former Green Beret who worked for the CIA said he is convinced former CIA analyst Kevin Mulcahy was killed to stop him from testifying against a renegade ex-intelligence agent accused of arming Libyan terrorists, it was reported Wednesday.

The FBI is investigating the mysterious death of Mulcahy, 40. An autopsy did not immediately pinpoint the cause of his death at a remote motel cabin in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. Further tests, including those for poison, were ordered.

A spokesman at FBI headquarters said a preliminary investigation would be conducted by the bureau's Richmond, Va., office, and Shenandoah County authorities also said they would investigate pending a final autopsy finding.

Mulcahy's body was found Tuesday morning jack-knifed in the cabin doorway. A window had been shattered by a shotgun.

"Immediately I knew that he was killed to keep from testifying before the trial that's coming up in Houston," former Green Beret Luke Thompson told CBS News. He met Mulcahy on several occasions and says he was recruited by Edwin Wilson to train commandos in Libya.

Mulcahy, a communications expert who left the CIA in 1968, was the second potential prosecution witness to die in the case of Wilson, a renegade ex-CIA agent accused of working for Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy. He was scheduled to testify against Wilson next month.

"Probably drugs," said Thompson, speculating on the cause of death. "Probably simulated a heart attack ... There's a number of ways, but that's probably the most common. The drug is not traceable an hour or so after death."

Thompson said he fears for his own life now.

"I'm trying to stay away from my home as much as possible," he said, adding that he has not been offered federal protection. "I don't want my family involved."

A Colorado policeman, Ray Martinez, told CBS Mulcahy called him a week and a half ago, and said he was being followed from one motel room to another.

"He's been in rooms and knows that when he's been out of the room, somebody's been in his room," Martinez said. "He didn't know, in his words, if there's a bomb being planted or somebody was setting him up, or if he's going to be poisoned.

"He'd expressed that several times that he thought he could be poisoned to death," the officer said.

"This case has certain unusual aspects to it," said James Beyer, deputy medical examiner for Northern Virginia District, referring to the public and legal aspects of the case.

Beyer said the "cause of death is pending," and results from further tests, including routine tests for poison, could take several weeks. He declined to say whether the autopsy revealed high alcohol content in the blood.

Donald Mulcahy, the dead man's father and a retired CIA official, said his son had been treated for alcoholism and had been depressed recently and started to drink again. He said he doubted his son was murdered.

Gary Dalton, Shenandoah County Sheriff's deputy who found Mulcahy's body at the Mountain View Motel Court in Edinburg, Va., said there was "no inkling whatsoever" to suggest foul play. "No trauma to the body. No marks. No, nothing that indicated foul play," he said.

Reagan aide hints at tax increase

By ROBERT S. BOYD
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

WASHINGTON — One of President Reagan's top economic advisers Wednesday joined the growing chorus of Republican congressional leaders and private economists calling for a slowdown in Social Security and defense spending to reduce the federal deficit.

William Niskanen, a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, also said another tax increase may be necessary next year as part of a deficit-cutting package.

Answering questions at a meeting of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Niskanen said the administration foresees "large and disturbing" deficits in coming years. "The numbers are getting higher and have to be reduced," he said.

"Our hope is that the deficit can be reduced by spending restraint," he went on. "We have to have restraint on defense, Social Security, health care and interest rates ... Maybe a tax package will be necessary in order to get spending restraints."

Other administration officials have said similar things privately, but not on the public record, because the president disagrees.

Reagan has rejected another tax increase, on top of the $99 billion boost he reluctantly accepted last summer. He has repeatedly turned down appeals from some members of his administration to slow down the rise in military outlays. And, after an abortive effort to trim Social Security costs last year, the president put off a decision on the politically explosive topic until after Tuesday's election.

"I have been instructed to say nothing about Social Security until Nov. 3," Niskanen said.

Nevertheless, the president is becoming more and more isolated within his own party and administration on Social Security and defense cuts and a possible tax increase.

The chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, Pete Domenici, R-N.M., has called for "restraint" on defense spending and a slowdown in the growth of entitlement programs, including Social Security and Medicare.

The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Robert Dole, R-Kan., has proposed that Congress take up Social Security reform at its post-election session. Dole also urged a close look at ways to control defense spending and raise more revenues next year.

The chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, Jake Garn, R-Utah, has complained that "nobody has the guts to discuss Social Security ... You've got to either change the benefit levels ... or dramatically increase taxes. I wish Congress would face up to that."

Idaho whoopers arrive at wintering grounds

BOSQUE—DEL APACHE, N.M. (UPI) — Two whooping cranes, members of an experimental flock of the endangered birds, arrived Tuesday at their winter grounds in New Mexico's central Rio Grande Valley.

Nita Fuller, spokeswoman for the Bosque Del Apache National Wildlife Refuge, said an adult whooper and a juvenile have completed the annual fall migration from the summer grounds in southeastern Idaho.

"We've been notified that all the birds have left Idaho and are on their way," Mrs. Fuller said. "So far, the first arrivals look to be in good shape."

She said another 15 whoopers have started the migration from Gray's Lake National Wildlife Refuge.

The flock has been created by Canadian and U.S. wildlife officials who took eggs from the nests of the only established wild flock, which summers in northwestern Canada, and placed in sandhill crane nests at Gray's Lake.

Reagan delivers sunny message to business

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan told a group of small business leaders Wednesday "there is some sunshine" on the economic horizon and pledged that his policies will remain unchanged.

"You probably haven't heard the expressions before, but we are going to 'stay the course,'" Reagan joked, referring to the theme of his recent political campaign appearances.

He said that with the lowering of interest rates, "there is some sunshine on the horizon" and his policies, "if supported by businessmen, "can make a drastic reduction in this recession."

The business leaders gathered in the Cabinet Room to open a series of meetings with Reagan to give the administration feedback on their concerns.

Harley W. Snyder, of Valparaiso, Ind., representing the National Association of Realtors, presented Reagan a miniature plywood dollhouse that carried a "Sold" sign. In a long salute, Snyder complimented Reagan for "your leadership" in drafting economic policies through which he said some 150,000 to 200,000 jobs — from homebuilding to redecorating — have been made available due to lower inflation and interest rates.

Reagan said that with the present economic climate, "millions of more people" will be able to afford homes and pledged that there will be more jobs to come.

CALDWELL (UPI) — Two Canyon County-based political action committees have reported spending more than $26,000 through mid-October on bumper stickers and a comic book attacking Gov. John Evans.

From May 10 through Oct. 18, BRIMSTONE — a Caldwell group responsible for printing and distributing an anti-Evans comic, listed spending of $17,743, said Vern Hinkle, committee president.

FIRE — "Free Idahoans to Replace Evans" — in a financial disclosure covering the same time period reported spending $8,616.91 for printing and distributing an anti-Evans bumper sticker.

Hinkle said his group received $8,950 in contributions and borrowed $10,000 from the Idaho First National Bank for a total of $18,950.

He said 300,000 copies of the comic were printed and 230,000 were distributed statewide before the group decided late last week to abandon the project.

The comic depicted Evans as an inept tool of national labor bosses and blamed him for the closure of Bunker Hill Co. and the accompanying loss of about 2,100 Idaho jobs.

The sunshine report filed by BRIMSTONE included contributions and expenses incurred by the committee up to Oct. 18, Hinkle told the Idaho Press Tribune in Nampa.

Cost figures for distributing the comic as a newspaper insert include only some of the 12 daily and weekly papers which carried the book, he said, because part of the statewide distribution came after the report's cutoff date.

Another election, another Hansen win

Probably one of the least exciting races in this political season is the 2nd Congressional District race between Republican George Hansen and Democrat Richard Stallings. The personalities are colorful, but the contest appears to be another Hansen runaway.

Hansen consistently has stomped his Democratic opposition in past elections and may well continue that record this year.

His conservative dogma and a propensity toward ethical entanglements have created a love-hate relationship with his constituents. Few people are neutral when it comes to Big George.

Despite his questionable personal financial behavior, when it comes to politics and representing his district, Hansen has been true to his word. He has maintained a consistent conservative philosophy that expounds free enterprise and the sanctity of individual rights.

His current opponent, Richard Stallings, has taken the well-trodden path of presenting himself as a moderate alternative. But low campaign visibility, lack of name identification and Democratic Party stigma have produced a lightweight campaign against this formidable incumbent.

Frankly, the only ranking Democrat we see capable of dethroning George is currently governor of Idaho, but we can't see him running for a mere House seat.

Stallings has downplayed the ethical issues in the race, wisely preferring to subtlely infuse them into the campaign, thus avoiding voter backlash. This newspaper has criticized Hansen's personal financial affairs pointedly for several reasons: the unethical behavior of an elected official, the embarrassment he brings to the district, and the questionable trust such issues reflect on our representative.

But the bottom line on Hansen is his voting record, on which he has been consistent. We've wondered whether desperate financial dealings ultimately might influence his voting, but to date, we can find no evidence of that.

Setting aside the ethics issues, the pragmatic decision is this contest then becomes a House vote for President Reagan or for Tip O'Neill. We cannot be certain that, given the chance, Stallings would heel to the Democratic line. But that's a safe bet.

Hansen, on the other hand, is a known commodity, a firm supporter of Reaganomics, which we, too, generally support. Given the current makeup of the House and the predictable opposition it has raised to Reagan, we think it expedient to provide the president with the strongest possible support.

Hansen generally has been a consistent Reagan loyalist. A friendly voice from Idaho in the next two years may help to further trim the bureaucracy.

Finally, we encourage Hansen to make every effort to bring his personal financial affairs in order and to follow both the spirit and the letter of the ethics-disclosure law. He would greatly enhance his respect in the district, and in the House, and he would go beyond simply providing a predictable voting record.

Elect Young, Moon

Joe R. Williams has served nearly a quarter of a century (24 years) as state auditor. It has been eight years, however, since he has faced an opponent, and in that time, two things have changed.

First, Williams' relationship with the other branches of Idaho government has worsened. Partly to circumvent Williams' office, the Legislature has created and expanded its own auditing service, essentially duplicating services that might have been performed in Williams' office if the relationship had been better. The governor's office also has a staff to prepare proposed state budgets, again a duplicated service that costs money.

Part of the rift comes from the fact that Williams seems one of the few unbeatable Democrats in Idaho politics; that surely rankles a Republican-dominated Legislature. But we think the duplication-of-service argument makes sense nonetheless.

We are impressed with Republican challenger Nolan Young's experience as a certified public accountant and his desire to put the state on an accrual accounting system, which would give officials a considerably more accurate picture of state finances.

Joe Williams is 78, an age when many politicians begin to think seriously of retirement, as he apparently did before this election. We think Williams has served Idaho well in some ways, but now, we think, is the time for a change.

Nolan Young has the skills necessary to bring needed reforms to the state's auditing process, and we endorse him for election.

Marjorie Ruth Moon "is Idaho," as one caller told us last week in our political opinion survey. Indeed, she is. Miss Moon has been a penny-pinching, dollar-stretching state treasurer. We think she should be returned to office.

Tomorrow: endorsements in the lieutenant governor and attorney general contests.

Dentists fear income loss

Why the dentists are afraid that passing this initative will lower their professional standards puzzles me. The only thing that will be lowered is their income and the cost of dentures to the citizens of Idaho.

Denturists do not extract teeth, they only make and repair dentures. They are also well trained in the area of oral health. Let's give the citizens of Idaho the freedom of choice at not cost to the taxpayers. The denturists will pay for their own licensing and any other legal fees necessary.

We are intelligent enough to know when the services of a dentist are needed. Give us the freedom of choice!

Moon has earned money

During the time she has been in office, Marjorie Ruth Moon has made over $90 million in interest for the taxpayers of Idaho.

Because she makes so much in interest, our state government costs each of less from our own pockets. She is a most refreshing professional doing a very important job! I urge you to vote on Nov. 2, and to vote for Marjorie Ruth Moon as your state treasurer.

Business creates jobs

The number one concern of Americans and Idahoans this election year is unemployment. So I ask the question: what creates jobs? Of course it is our businesses, large and small. On Nov. 2 we will choose a governor that will lead our state for the next four-years; four-critical years for our businesses.

John Evans has again and again proved himself to be against our business. Phil Batt on the other hand has thought business was the key to a thriving state. Business has been neglected, restricted and always thought it would be there. We have in our minds that big business is bad. Now business, big and small, are going bankrupt and laying off workers. The state's tax revenues are falling because of a smaller base, but the state's expenses keep right on causing deficit spending. Our whole economy is tied to how our bisinesses are doing. If they fail; jobs fall. To get Idaho moving and growing again we are going to have to have a leader that is pro-business. After all, it's the businesses that creates the jobs for us all.

LAYNE OSBORNE

State police back Bruce

Because of the great controversy that has arisen between Judge Ronald Bruce and Donald Chisholm, we feel that we must express our deep concern in this matter. It is our observation that both men are amply qualified to perform the duties that are required of a District Judge.

However, many of us have had the opportunity to observe first hand the capabilities of Judge Bruce. He is fair, conscientious, and withouth a doubt, a completely honest man. From our point of view, his greatest quality, is his ability to hand down sentences that are appropriate for the crimes committed.

In this era of increased criminal activity, this quality must not be over-looked. We feel that if Judge Bruce is removed from office, the loss sustained by the citizens of the state of Idaho would be substantial. We, as a consolidated group of individuals, totally support the retention of Judge Ronald Bruce.

Voters should quiz candidates on drunken driving issue

Remember Hoover years

Remember when during the Hoover administration, there was a long bread line — well now during this present administration there will be two long bread lines. One for white, and one for rye.

Oh, by the way, if this is any solace to anyone — if you went broke '81 or '82, you won't have to worry about the crash of '83.

P.S. Does this ring a familiar bell to anyone? "Prosperity is just around the corner."

VERNON L. HERZINGER
Buhl

Explore alcohol positions

Almost all the candidates are talking tough on crime and drunk drivers, but all of them that I have heard address these issues are either ignorant of or intimidated by the root cause of both — addiction to legal or illegal substances.

Steve Symms recently cited a report, in one of his mailings that tells of 242 drug addicts committing 500,000 crimes in an 11-year period. (Steve is a little wary of alcohol statistics in as much as he is a producer.)

The Chronicle of Higher Education cites Times News, July 30, 1982, alcohol being involved in 80 percent of campus vandalism and that 70 to 95 percent of students use alcohol. (How about the educators?)

My belief is that almost all political office holders are wary of anything that might be construed as the first step to prohibition.

In my own case, I stopped bing a professional drunk driver when I stopped drinking alcohol, but this is not appropriate for everyone, and what we need is recognition of the problem by the peoples' representative and willingness on the part of the people to support effective, meaningful, and humane legislation that will reverse the trend and reduce the terrible price we pay today in dollars and quality of life.

We must reason together, but if our leaders are timid or ignorant the costs will dramatically increase. We hear of a 13 to $35 million state deficit, but no one in a managerial position will talk about the $285 million it costs every year to support addiction in Idaho, according to our Department of Health and Welfare.

We must ask our candidates for their position and future plans and if they are less than enthusiastic about a realistic and workable program for Idaho, based on successful efforts in other states, then they should be unworthy of our support.

Vote No on amendment

On Nov. 2, I strongly urge each voter to take note of the misleading, double negative wording of SJR 110 and vote "No" on this constitutional amendment.

The effect of this amendment would be first, to permit the concentration of corporate power into the hands of fewer and fewer people, and second, to take away the protection to the public by the clear and bold identification of all non-voting stock offered for sale.

Under the constitution of Idaho, stockholders with any substantial amount of stock, even though less than a majority of stock, were assured some voice in corporate government through the constitutionally guaranteed method of cumulative voting in the stockholders selection of members of the board of directors within any and all Idaho corporations.

Gone would be any requirement for the clear labeling of non-voting stock. Gone also would be the prohibition against "any other manner" of electing directors.

Although unstated, SJR 110 would free the Legislature to enact laws to allow corporations to choose non-culumative voting for corporate directors, just as long as the option for cumulative voting remains. Non-cumulative voting enables stockholder holding just over 50 percent of the stock to select all directors (a winner take all situation) while minority stockholders could not elect even one director to represent their viewpoint and interest in the management of the comany, even though minority stockholders might own as much as 49 percent of the stock of the corporation.

The average stock buyer may find corporate laws and management complex and sometimes confusing. Today that person has some protection through the Idaho Constitution. Should SJR 110 pass protections would be eliminated. It is unfortunate that the official "explanation of SJR 110 and its effect" was inaccurate and misleading

Tell your friends and vote "No" on SJR 110.

Candidate Watts has "experience, honesty, frugality"

Watts has ability

I worked with Cheryl Watts in the county clerk's office for seven years.

Because I believe in her ability and her principals, I'm voting for her for Jerome County clerk.

I hope you will too.

LARUE MASSEE
Jerome

What taxpayer expects

In my opinion a competent county clerk performs "every" duty as prescribed by Idaho Code.

To achieve this, a county clerk must be experienced, honest and frugal. Also willing to sacrifice family, personal time, personal preferences and ideals to represent all the taxpayers.

A county clerk is employed by the taxpayers of the county and being one of said, I expect:

1. My tax dollar to be spent in a wise and conomical way while upholding the law.

2. When representing the county at conventions or workshops, the person or persons to be there, not out socializing.

3. The county clerk in the office during regular working hours each day, other than when county business warrants otherwise.

4. If I require services from the clerk's office, to be served in a courteous manner by the clerk and the deputies, dressed, trained and working in a business-like manner.

CHERYL WATTS

Having worked with Cheryl Watts for four of the 9½ years she was employed in the Jerome County Clerk's office I feel confident that she "will and is capable" with her experience, honesty and frugality of meeting these necessary and important requirements to run an effective clerk's office.

I'm casting my vote for Cheryl Watts for clerk of the district court of Jerome County and urge you to do likewise.

BETTE DOUGHTY
Jerome

Clerk is coordinator

We have a very important county office to be filled in the upcoming election. This is the office of Jerome County clerk-auditor.

I have served three years on the city council and four years as mayor of Hazelton and through this experience, have discovered how extremely important this office is to the function of the government unit.

As it would pertain to the county level, the clerk must be very trustworthy as the commissioners have to rely so heavily on what she presents to them for authorization. She must really have the county's best interest at heart as the clerk has so much control over the funds of the county.

The clerk must be someone who will stay in town and run the office and not be traveling all over the countryside spending the taxpayers' money on so many unneeded meetings. This travel should be requested ahead of time and authorized by the county commissioners, not presented to them after the fact for reimbursement.

I fail to understand how a person can do a good job in this office when she had no knowledge or experience to begin with and due to personnel turnover, has a largely inexperienced staff. Add that to extensive absences from the office and it becomes difficult to comprehend how an office can have been streamlined to any degree of efficiency. The reports I get indicate it is less efficient now than four years ago.

The clerk must act as coordinator with all of the county offices, this includes the assessor's, treasurer's, sheriff's, judges', and the prosecutor's offices and the city officials. We must have someone who works for cooperation among these offices.

Cheryl Watts is very interested in all agencies working smoothly together.

Voters, consider the direction you want the county to go. I'm voting for Cheryl Watts.

Evans record called "inconsistent"; Scott is "community leader"

Scott is hard-working

I have known Donna Scott for many years and have worked with her in the United Methodist Church and Twin Falls County Republican Women. It has been a delight to watch her grow from a quiet, dependable mother and Sunday school teacher to a respected, intelligent community leader.

She is hardworking and dedicated to the basic conservative philosophy of the Republican party. She has held offices on the local and state level and was invited, along with a select group of outstanding Republican Women to visit Washington D.C. and have tea with Nancy Reagan last spring. She is really a "super gal" and would do an outstanding job in the State Legislature.

Evans uses smoke screen

The most consistent behavior of Gov. John Evans in this election is to be inconsistent, to use scare tactics to confuse the voter and use smoke screens to avoid exposing his double standards.

To achieve re-election as governor, Mr. Evans has maneuvered the proposed transfer or sale of 1.3 percent of over 12 billion acres of BLM lands in Idaho over a period of years. He has objected to a federal program to sell or trade small difficult-to-manage parcels of surplus, unproductive BLM lands to the state of Idaho, other federal agencies, municipalities, or private individuals; all of whom could better manage and utilize such parcels of lands to the benefit of Idaho economy.

Gov. Evans' strong objection was voiced to the news media present at an open meeting of the state Land Board. Fifteen minutes later the state Land Board, of which he is the presiding officer, sold 4,500 acres of state grazing and agricultural lands. The 4,500 acres of state lands are 10 times more than the BLM sold in all of 1982.

Now that the smoke screen has been blown away, exposing to view the facts and John Evans' double standard, perhaps one could expect to hear all of the story.

Bruce barely lost before

In the May primary, Judge Ronald D. Bruce missed winning the judicial election outright by just a handful of votes.

In Minidoka County, where the voters know both Judge Bruce and Rupert City Attorney Don Chisholm, Judge Bruce received an overwhelming majority of the votes.

I ask the rest of Magic Valley to help the people of Minidoka County keep Ron Bruce their District Judge.

CORY TOWELL
Rupert

Chisholm will serve well

When possible I like to meet and know a candidate for public office before I can be supportive. In the case of Don Chisholm, candidate for District Judge, I personally "interviewed" him in his office on Sept. 24, 1982, for 45 minutes. I found him to be very personable and warm, of high personal integrity, very frank and honest in answer to my questions, a champion of truth and justice.

I have known the incumbent Ron Bruce for nearly five years and have become increasingly disillusioned with him.

Initially a judge is appointed. Then he must face a confirmation vote by the people every four years. All too often, these appointments are more political than by qualifications. In the courtroom only about 10 percent of the population deal directly with a judge. So the other 90 percent must go on hearsay.

Well, I say honor and justice need to be restored to the district bench in Rupert! Don Chisholm has been truthful in his public statements. Sometimes the truth hurts, especially those who have been deceived for so long. Fellow citizens, please join me in a positive vote Nov. 2. Don Chisholm will serve us well.

Moon has experience

Would you trust your doctor's prescription for you to just anybody to make it up? Of course not. So why should we trust the office of state treasurer, which requires just as much professional know-how, to a druggist?

One candidate for state treasurer told the League of Women Voters that he had "investment experience (personal)." The other candidate, our long-time State Treasurer Marjorie Ruth Moon, rightly pointed out her 19 years of experience in operating a modern, professional investment program for Idaho's treasury cash, and her two years' experience in conducting a voluntary joint investment program with Idaho local governments.

Marjorie Ruth Moon has made a lot of money for us taxpayers by carrying on these programs in such a professional and efficient manner. We should vote for her for State Treasurer again, because she has the experience and the know-how to do the job as it should be done.

Bible cartoon pitiful

Congratulations on reaching new heights of poor taste and insulting material in The Times-News. I am referring to your editorial cartoon on Oct. 21, lampooning the new Reader's Digest Condensed Bible. Whether or not a condensed Bible is an intelligent undertaking is not the issue here. The cartoon does not merely ridicule the Reader's Digest, it makes fun of the Bible itself. You're really scraping the bottom of the barrel for "satirical humor," aren't you? This must be the creative process that went through your mind when you tried to come up with a cartoon for the Oct. 21 editorial page: "Well, let's see . . . we've satirized every head of state, every nation, every current issue and event. There's only one subject left — God! Gee, why didn't I think of this before? It's a natural!"

Although you yourself didn't draw the cartoon, by printing it in your paper you become an accessor to this pitiful attempt at humor. But you have come up with a novel way of making yourself look stupid. That in itself deserves some praise.

Let's vote for Evans

Sitting among a large crowd of people recently at the ISU-Montana football game, Phil Batt (represented) received a very unwelcome approval.

A few cheers popped from the crowd but the large majority expressed their opinions towards Batt with antipathy influence.

I, myself, have the same taste for Batt and fully agree with the "boo crew." I personally beleive that Governor Evans will "Move Idaho Ahead" and continue to bring in more industry and further jobs for the people. There is no such way I could vote for anyone (Republican or Democrat) considering that union will save the state while pussyfooting and pinching the people for his own problems such as Phil Batt does. That is cheap and tricky play.

I vote for the man, not the party and Governor Evans definitely will receive my vote. So Evans lovers, let's vote, kick back and wait for the great Mr. Hinkle's droll publication "The Adventures of Big John" backfire.

Hansen's voting record praised

I have been voting for 39 years and I have come to the conclusion that most politicians only tell you what they think you want to hear just prior to an election. But when you have an incumbent then you have no doubt as to where and how he stands on issues.

Let's look at George Hansen's voting record.

He has consistently voted to oppose the growing menace of world communism.

Oppose big government getting any bigger. Bring more individual responsibility and less dependency on a welfare state. Halt the growth of socialism in the United States. Halt the flow of foreign aid to our enemies. Keep our canal. Oppose the murder of unborn human beings. Maintain the right of citizens to own firearms. Balance the U.S. budget. Lessen the strangle hold big unions have on our economy. Maintain a strong military to defend our country.

During my 20 years in the military of our country I was able to visit 58 countries and the things I have seen throughout the world have given me a deep love and a greater appreciation for the freedoms and wonders of our country.

I want our nation to stay free, strong and independent. That's why I'm for George Hansen. His voting record proves that he's for all the things I'm for and against the things that would destroy and tear down the wonderful country we live in.

Batt will be hurt by comic book; defended for "record of success"

Evans veto was right

With the election less than a week away, it seems as though Phil Batt has started his "win at any cause campaign." If he had bothered to check the facts on why Nucor Steel Co. is building its new plants in Utah instead of Idaho, he wouldn't be wiping egg of his face now. They said a right to work bill made no difference.

Governor Evans made the right choice by vetoing it. Only 14 percent of Idaho's work force are union members, but they are taxpayers and they have rights which deserve to be protected.

Sure the workers at Bunker Hill voted a majority to accept a contract from the investors. But it was only an advisory vote proved by the fact that since they didn't own the company, the investors should have had Gulf Resources negotiate and sign the contract or they should have bought it and negotiated after it was theirs.

I'm a union member and I don't do everything my union advises me to. But for example they edorsed Carter over Reagan. I voted for Reagan. What a mistake. If Batt supports Reagan's policies then he's for amnesty for illegals with unemployment at 10.1 percent, sale of public lands, tax breaks favoring the rich, and cuts in retirement pensions for people who have paid in them for years. Think I'll pass on you Phil.

PHIL BATT

Roberts backs Batt

As a former chairman of the House Appropriations Committee of the Idaho Legislature (1972-76), I am definitely aware of the capability needed to manage the large business of Idaho state government. That is why I have decided to support Phil Batt for Governor.

Phil Batt has a record of success in efficient and profitable management of his farming and business operation. He has shown in past years that he can make tough governmental decisions and not be blown around by the political winds.

By contrast, our present governor has become the first governor in Idaho's history to finish the fiscal year in a financial deficit situation. Of course, he tried to cover it up by moving the payment of bills into fiscal 1983, but the fact still remains that because of Evan's improper management, the State of Idaho was unable to pay $13,000,000 of bills incurred in fiscal 1982.

It's time to change managers and Phil Batt should be chosen. He has proven his ability through a record of successful business management. Vote for a man whose campaign contributions are with no strings attached.

BILL ROBERTS

Comic hurt opposition

Many years ago I heard my father confess that he sometimes voted for an unknown candidate in preference to one that he knew. The reason given was that the unknown could be much better and could not be worse than the one which he knew. This, of course, is not the ideal way to vote.

In recent years we are receiving much better voter information, and it is my opinion that we should be appreciative of the type of individuals and their dedication in aspiring to public office as compared to those of the time and place in which my father lived and voted.

My own experiences in entering the voting booth are always a reminder of difficult examinations in previous school years. There comes a sudden awareness that the homework was not as thorough as it should have been and while familiarity and strong preference is felt for some of the candidates and issues, there are others who are only names.

Not many of us will argue with the premise that good government is dependent upon an intelligent and informed electorate. Yet, it is impossible to receive passing grades in voter responsibility unless we make some preparation before entering the voting booth.

In my personal voting record for the coming election, it is my purpose that comfort and aid will not be given to the editors and supporters of Comic Books.

Can you imagine what our future elections will be like if in this election this tactic becomes credited with swaying an election?

The Comic Book, I feel, gives much more information concerning the opposition than it does the candidate who is being characterized and ridiculed.

Belk's letter draws former officials' ire

We read with interest Glenda Belk's letter in Sunday's paper listing the reasons she thinks she should be returned to office.

First Mrs. Belk states her reason for being elected to the office of county clerk was to provide service for the county. Her last day in the office handily illustrates the type of service she really provided the county during the past four years. The last day to register voters was Friday, Oct. 22, but Mrs. Belk's service to the people of Jerome County was to close the office during the lunch hour, one of the busy times on the last day of registration.

No other official received gifts in return for their purchases — that is the real issue. The total dollar amount of the purchases by all other offices was $301.99 compared to more than $9,000 by Mrs. Belk.

No purchases were made from American Data Products by the county clerk's office prior to Mrs. Belk's term of office. Maybe Mrs. Belk's case has been settled in court, but it shouldn't be settled in the minds of the Jerome County taxpayers and voters. She admitted taking the gifts.

It is very distressing to us to see the county of Jerome approach bankruptcy when four years ago it was in good financial condition. Two of the county funds have had to start paying interest on registered warrants already this calendar year. With the current Expense Fund being depleted $414,378 on Sept. 30, 1979 to a mere $132,530 on Sept. 30, 1982, we anticipate that Current Expense Warrants will be registered probably in November.

Ordinary quarterly expenditures from this fund have averaged $240,000. Added to that figure is the cost of next week's election and it doesn't take much arithmetic to know what the county's financial situation will be. Unfortunately the 1982 property tax collections to alleviate the problem won't be coming in December this year as in the past years.

We are all concerned that Mrs. Belk was unable to correctly set tax levies, jeopardizing the financial condition of all Jerome County taxing districts. The 1982 levy error that would have created approximately a $200,000 loss of revenue for the county is the latest example.

The treasurer's report will also show the Quasi Court fund $571.24 in the red, a situation completely unheard of and untenable.

Mrs. Belk's statement regarding claim forms already ordered to be used by her in January 1983 and new procedures she is formulating is very distressing. The Idaho Code specifies the legal procedures to be followed before the taxpayers' money may be spent and also provides the claimant sign a statment the claim is true.

Did Mrs. Belk sign the oath on the travel voue

Considering the financial condition of the county and the law concerning the procedures for claims and payments from county moneys, Mrs. Belk's statement regarding claim forms already ordered to be used by her in January 1983 and new procedures she is formulating, is very distressing. The Idaho Code specifies the legal procedures to be followed before the taxpayers' money may be spent and also provides the claimant sign a statment the claim is true.

Did Mrs. Belk sign the oath on the travel voucher claim as required by law? Or was her signature on the oath forged?

We would submit that the travel voucher which Mrs. Belk claims appears to be false, is false because it is general knowledge that the round trip mileage to Hailey is not 240 miles.

We cannot feel the voters of Jerome county can ever return Mrs. Belk to public office.

Lawyer may seek acquittal of Dallas

By MARK SHENEFELT
United Press International

BOISE (UPI) — An attorney who defended Claude Lafayette Dallas on charges he murdered two game wardens said Wednesday he might try to overturn a pair of manslaughter convictions returned against the Nevada trapper.

Dallas should be acquitted outright because prosecutors failed to prove that wardens William Pogue and Conley Elms were still alive when Dallas fired final shots into their heads, contended defense lawyer Michael Donnelly, Boise.

The trapper was convicted by a 12-member Canyon County jury Oct. 20 on two counts of voluntary manslaughter, one count of concealing evidence and two counts of using a firearm in the commission of a felony.

Dallas, 32, testified he shot the wardens in self defense after they confronted him at his camp Jan. 5, 1981 to investigate poaching reports. He said Pogue threatened to kill him and drew a gun, prompting the trapper to pull his own weapon and shoot the men.

Court officials in Caldwell said Wednesday a hearing for post-trial motions was tentatively scheduled for Thursday morning before Third District Judge Edward Lodge, who presided over the Dallas trial.

"One motion that may be heard is a judgment of acquittal on the charges on which he (Dallas) was convicted," Donnelly said. "Our feeling is that the state had not proven beyond a reasonable doubt that ... the victims were alive at the time of the final shots."

Prosecutors alleged during the month-long trial that Dallas gunned down the wardens in cold blood and then "executed" them with single shots in the back of the head in the manner of a trapper finishing off ensnared game.

Jurors said they might have acquitted Dallas in the killings except for the final shots.

Donnelly said he also planned to ask Lodge to release Dallas on his own recognizance until a sentencing hearing, which is tentatively scheduled for Dec. 1.

The attorney also said the defense was considering filing a motion to have county officials reimburse Dallas for the costs of his defense.

Donnelly said he hoped Lodge would grant Dallas his release without bail or permit the defendant to post bond. The trapper has been in the Canyon County Jail without bail since last spring, when he was arrested amid gunfire north of Winnemucca, Nev.

Donnelly said he wasn't sure what Dallas would do or where he would go if he gained his freedom.

"Any plans that he does have would be kept confidential for his own protection," Donnelly said.

Donnelly said Dallas has been threatened because of the killings of the Pogue, 50, and Elms, 34.

"There have been some generalized threats made to our office via phone," he said.

Donnelly said the defense was concerned by antagonistic remarks that have been directed at Dallas by Ed Pogue, younger brother of the slain warden.

The lawyer added he didn't want to discuss the specific nature of some of the threatening calls he said his office has received.

Hansen says voters won't buy attack

POCATELLO (UPI) — Second Congressional District voters aren't swayed by charges that Rep. George Hansen hasn't done enough to seek government approval for enlargement of the Palisades Dam hydroelectric plant, the GOP lawmaker said Wednesday.

Hansen said he received a letter from Interior Secretary James Watt Wednesday saying the Palisades expansion project on the Snake River in eastern Idaho has been added to a new list of federal water projects.

Watt had announced the Idaho undertaking Tuesday at Salt Lake City along with nine other new federal water projects.

Richard Stallings, Hansen's Democratic challenger, has charged during the campaign that the GOP lawmaker has been ineffective and lackadaisical in efforts to secure federal authorization for the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation project.

"I don't know that the people bought that," Hansen said. "Every two years we see an effort on the part of certain politicians to play politics with Idaho land and water issues."

Hansen, who is seeking a seventh term in Congress, said the push by Idahoans to get the federal government to approve the Palisades project was following the "normal course of events."

"I don't think this (Stallings' charges) will have, or have had, much influence," Hansen said.

Hansen said Watt's letter indicated the Interior Department is preparing a final proposal on the Palisades project for submittal to Congress in the lame-duck session after next Tuesday's general election.

The congressman said Watt noted that it has taken so long to prepare for the long-sought Palisades project because the department's report "has been complicated by the Senate action adding a number of new projects to the authorization legislation."

McClure: Watt wasn't playing politics

BOISE (UPI) — Interior Secretary James Watt was not attempting to score campaign points for Republicans when he announced new Western water projects just seven days before the general election, Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, said Wednesday.

Watt disclosed at Salt Lake City Tuesday that the Reagan administration has approved or is considering several reclamation projects, including expansion of the Palisades Dam hydroelectric plant on the Snake River in eastern Idaho.

McClure acknowledged Watt's announcement could be viewed as an attempt to attract votes for GOP congressmen who are sympathetic to President Reagan — and who face tough re-election battles next Tuesday.

"The timing of the announcement just before the election does cause some people to suspect it's an election-year ploy ... but the Reagan administration has been committed to such projects from the very start," McClure said at a news conference in the Idaho Statehouse.

McClure was appearing in Boise to defend Watt on land management and water issues and try to boost the candidacies of Idaho Republicans such as gubernatorial nominee Phil Batt and Reps. George Hansen and Larry Craig.

The senator said it took the administration until now to announce plans for the water projects because it needed the past 18 months to research the economic feasibility and benefits of many possible reclamation jobs.

"The only reason this was delayed is because none of these (projects) were ready," McClure said.

He also lambasted political candidates who have claimed that Watt and other administration officials are plotting to sell huge sections of Western public lands to private interests.

Jetliner's door opens, forces Boise landing

BOISE (UPI) — A rear passenger door on a Western Airlines jetliner popped open in flight Wednesday, forcing the Boeing 727 with 63 people aboard to make an emergency landing at Boise.

Fire trucks and crews lined the Gowen Field runway as the plane — en route to Portland, Ore., from Salt Lake City — touched down without incident, authorities said.

Western spokesman Steve Brown said the door came ajar somewhere between Salt Lake City and Boise, triggering a warning light in the cockpit and leading the six-member crew to prepare the 57 passengers for an emergency landing.

Brown said the aerodynamic effects of the flight kept the door only slightly ajar for most of the flight, but as the jet landed the door swung open and the retractable ladder attached to it extended.

The airline official said a bulkhead between the outer door and the inside of the plane prevented any loss of cabin pressure in the plane, which has a capacity of 140 passengers.

"It (the ladder) was down as it landed, and it was still down as if they hadn't put it up when they left the last terminal building," said Boise Fire Capt. Vern Lowe.

The dangling stairway apparently didn't touch the ground as the plane landed, he said. No injuries or damage were reported, he said.

Home loan plan backed

BOISE (UPI) — A real estate task force recommended Tuesday that the state invest $20 million in public employee pension and endowment funds in a home mortgage program designed to stimulate Idaho's sagging housing industry.

The seven-member task force told Gov. John Evans the investment program would protect pension monies while providing a good return, and would generate enough cash to make up to 1,000 mortgages available to Idahoans.

Under the proposal, the state would place $20 million over a one-year period in a fund for the underwriting of certificates making mortgage money available to people who want to buy homes, said Dick Barrell, an executive with First Interstate Bank in Boise and chairman of the committee.

The certificates, carrying a Standard and Poors rating of AA, would be insured by a private mortgage insurance firm, Barrell said, which would return funds to the pension and endowment accounts as homebuyers make their house payments.

But does Mr. Hansen always vote right?

"On June 10, 1982 Mr. Hansen voted to CUT $7.4 BILLION from current funding levels for Social Security, Medicare and other "Safety net" programs. The same legislation INCREASED defense spending---at the expense of Idaho's elderly and disabled."

Irish terrorists saw off victim's hand

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — Northern Ireland's savage spree of violence claimed four new victims Wednesday, three policemen killed in an IRA bomb blast and a Catholic man whose right hand was sawed off with a hacksaw by intruders at his home.

The hacksaw victim, William Kelly, 37, was rushed to a hospital where microsurgeons reattached his hand.

His brother and sister previously were killed in sectarian violence, but police said the new assault may have stemmed from a personal feud. Two men were in custody, they said.

The outlawed Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility for detonating a 1,000-pound bomb in a drainage culvert beneath a road near Lurgan, southwest of Belfast, that sent a police Land Rover flying 30 to 40 feet in the air.

Belfast police said the three officers were killed instantly when the "large device" was set off by remote control. A spokesman said police believed terrorists "will try to take advantage of the tension, and we expect them to do other atrocities as well."

Two of those killed were identified as Sgt. Sean Quinn, 37, a father of three, and Constable Allan McCloy, 34, the father of two girls.

Police said they were looking for two men seen riding a stolen motorcycle near the blast site. The cycle was recovered later.

Sir John Harmon, head of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, said he felt "horror and sadness" after viewing the scene of the police attack and warned that an end to the violence depends "on the response of the community as a whole."

In the other incident, without precedent in the troubled province, two men burst into a home and sawed off Kelly's right hand with a hacksaw. Kelly made his way to his sister's house 70 yards away. Ambulance workers found the hand still tied to a chair and doctors at a hospital reattached it in an eight-hour operation.

Kelly was in intensive care after the surgery and spokesman of the Ulster Hospital said it would be several days before it was know if the operation succeeded.

The incident occurred in the mainly Protestant County Antrim town of Larne near Belfast. Another resident of the house escaped by jumping out a window, police said.

Two Marines drowned at Okinawa exercise

TOKYO (UPI) — Two Marines, one of them a decorated Vietnam veteran, drowned in a deep stream in Okinawa during a reconnaissance training mission, U.S. military authorities said Wednesday.

The bodies of Sgt. William A. Dibblee, 23, of Spokane, Wash., and Cpl. Jose F. Hernandez, 32, of El Paso, Texas, were recovered from the stream about two hours after the incident Tuesday.

Dibblee drowned while trying to rescue Hernandez, believed to be one of the last men to cross the river, an official statement on the incident said.

The drownings occurred when the Marines, part of a seven or eight man "deep reconn" team, were trying to cross a small tributary leading to the Ginoza reservoir in the central training area on Okinawa.

Hernandez, awarded silver and bronze stars and a combat action ribbon for action in Vietnam, disappeared about half way across the narrow stream in 15 to 20 feet of water. He made "no notice or cries for assistance," the statement said.

Dibblee and other members of the team tried to rescue Hernandez and "on his last attempt, Dibblee did not resurface," it said.

El Al workers close Tel Aviv airport

TEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) — Angry El Al workers and their children sprawled across runways, commandeered jumbo jets and battled police firing water cannons Wednesday, shutting down Ben-Gurion airport in a bitter labor dispute.

The government, in response, agreed to discuss ways to save the debt-ridden airline rather than disband it, but the hundreds of protesters continued their sit-in through the night.

"We'll sit here and won't move for a week or even two until someone from the government comes to talk with us," said one worker.

Clutching their children, El Al workers laid down on the runways while others seized tow trucks, pulled two Boeing 747s and a 707 jets around the tarmac and set afire piles of rubber tires — despite bursts from police water cannons.

It was the second day of violence by the employees. A total of 12 policemen and workers were wounded, state-run Israel Radio said. Three employees were arrested.

Some workers jumped into company jeeps and careened about the airport as two airliners circled above, unable to land because of workers and their children lying on the runways.

Spain police ready for election today

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — Spain put 130,000 troops and police on maximum alert Wednesday on the eve of a pivotal election expected to result in a landslide victory for the left.

The security forces guarded military facilities, radio stations and other key installations to prevent a possible right-wing coup designed to forestall a Socialist victory in the voting Thursday.

Six thousand special security officers also patrolled streets and polling stations to prevent disturbances. No campaigning was allowed Wednesday.

Reports in Madrid newspapers quoting police sources said security forces detained 25 ultra-right activists suspected of plotting to disrupt the election. They were held incommunicado under an anti-terrorism law.

The government on Oct. 2 announced the arrest of three artillery colonels it said were plotting a coup on the eve of the election. The plot envisaged artillery attacks on vital targets in Madrid, including the residence of King Juan Carlos, the government said.

Since then, nine other right-wing officers have been posted to remote bases in what government sources said was a move to isolate them and neutralize a possible conspiracy.

Rightists veto peace talks

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — Rightists opposed to talks with leftist guerrillas are blocking provisional President Alvaro Magana's efforts to establish a peace commission, presidential sources said Wednesday.

The rebels' military and political wings issued a joint statement in Mexico City Tuesday calling for a "direct dialogue" with the government to end the bloodshed in El Salvador, where three years of fighting have killed an estimated 35,000 people.

Magana has been trying to forge a "peace commission" that would serve as a vehicle for the government to open talks with the left, but has failed to draw support from El Salvador's three rightist political parties, sources said.

Sources at the Presidential House, who asked not to be identified, said Magana's plan has been endorsed only by the moderate Christian Democrats.

"The formation of the peace commission proposed by President Magana has collapsed several times," said one source.

Magana has set an Oct. 31 deadline for the formation of the committee but may abandon the idea of filling commission posts with political party members, the sources said.

But does Mr. Hansen always vote right?

While Mr. Hansen has supported legislation that has shifted $46 BILLION in spending from domestic programs to $45 BILLION in defense programs, he voted "NO" on an amendment which would have required the NATO countries, many of whom have economies STRONGER than ours, to increase their defense budgets by a mere 3 percent.

Can we continue to arm our European allies without requiring that their taxpayers share an equal burden with our U.S. taxpayers?

Midair collision kills four

CARROLLTON, Texas (UPI) — Two small planes collided and exploded over a residential neighborhood north of Dallas, killing four people Wednesday. Some of the debris struck an elementary school but the children escaped harm.

Authorities spent hours searching a 2-mile radius, suspecting the death toll would increase. But by late afternoon, Carrollton fire department spokesman Jeff Jones said the toll would stand at four.

The crash occurred at 10:20 a.m. MDT as a Piper Navajo enroute from Opelousas, La., was approaching Dallas Love Field, and a Cessna 337 Skymaster was taking off from nearby Addison Airport, a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said.

Workers vote against UAW

FLINT, Mich. (UPI) — White collar workers at a Chevrolet plant Wednesday overwhelmingly voted against joining the United Auto Workers union — the first election of its kind to take place at General Motors Corp.

They voted against the union 87-32, in what was seen as a setback for the UAW's fledgling drive to organize salaried workers. About 125 workers were eligible to vote, and 119 did so.

The election in Flint was seen as essential to encouraging other organizing drives among salaried workers, and UAW leaders had been confident of victory.

"We are planning to continue the campaign," UAW spokesman Dick Olson said.

GM officials were elated over the outcome.

Navy closes custody units

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (UPI) — Navy Secretary John Lehman ordered the permanent closing of all correctional custody units on Navy ships and censured two former officers of the USS Ranger because of the discipline death of a seaman.

Lehman issued the order Tuesday following a review of the death of Seaman Paul Trerice, 20, of Algonac, Mich., at Subic Bay in the Philippines on April 14, 1981.

Trerice died of cardiac arrest and heat exhaustion after being forced to perform punishment calisthenics while he was denied drinking water aboard the aircraft carrier USS Ranger.

His parents have filed a $4 million wrongful death suit against the Navy.

Government sets borrowing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Treasury Department Wednesday announced it plans to borrow $46.5 billion in the current quarter and another $47 billion to $52 billion in the first quarter of next year.

The three securities to be offered this quarter are all within the expectations of securities dealers.

A 3-year note for $6 billion, with a minimum denomination of $1,000, will be auctioned Wednesday. A 10-year note for $4 billion, with a minimum denomination of $1,000, will be auctioned Nov. 4, and a 30-year bond for $3 billion, callable Nov. 15, 2007, will be auctioned Nov. 9 with a minimum denomination of $1,000.

Draft resister convicted

DES MOINES (UPI) — A federal jury, undeterred by a pre-trial protest Wednesday which resulted in 21 arrests, deliberated 45 minutes before finding Gary Eklund guilty of failing to register for the draft.

Eklund, 22, of Davenport, was the first Iowan to be convicted of failure to register for the draft and the fourth nationwide.

The one-day trial began as federal marshals arrested protesters who formed a human chain to block the entrance to the courthouse.

Eklund said he did not register for the draft because he was confused about legal rulings on the registration law.

Dean claims health produces security

By ANNA CHRISTENSEN
United Press International

BOSTON — The dean of the Harvard School of Public Health Wednesday blasted President Reagan's military spending policies for jeopardizing health programs that are the key to world security.

"In the public dialogue ... security and military strength are often equated. I believe that a strong military is necessary, but not sufficient, to ensure the nation's security," Dr. Howard H. Hiatt said in an editorial in the New England Journal of Medicine.

"A strong case can also be made for the proposition that our security rests in part on the health of people in other nations, in that a world in which disease and malnutrition are widespread can never be secure," he said.

The decision to commit $1.6 trillion to the Department of Defense over the next five years will have a drastic effect on the health of children and the poor, Hiatt said, and would cost more in the long run.

The diversion of half a day's world military expenditures would finance the entire World Health Organization's program to control malaria, which kills over 1 million children annually in Africa alone, he said.

In 1978, over 12 million children under the age of five died of hunger, he said, yet a 20-year program to correct that could be implemented with 12 percent this year's world military spending.

The World Health Organization successfully eradicated smallpox in a 10-year program costing $300 million. The United States paid $3 million annually into the program, but saved $130 million a year in vaccination, surveillance and quarantine programs eliminated with the disease, he said.

The cost of 17 days' arms production could provide the world with safe drinking water, which is unavailable to over half the population.

Immunization programs save up to 10 times their cost, the editorial said, but 1982 funding cut the number of children who can be vaccinated from 6.3 million to 4.2 million.

An estimated 2 million people die each year from diseases for which vaccines are available, he said. "Three million children could be vaccinated each year for the price of one modern fighter plane ($20 million)."

"I'm suggesting as physicians we be more involved in alerting people to the costs and benefits of the program cuts," he said in an interview. "I think we've lost sight of what the effects on people may be.

"Decision makers should know that much of the medical damage resulting from malnutrition, unmonitored pregnancies, early childhood infections and other blights often associated with poverty can never be repaired by even the most sophisticated forms of medicine," he said.

Bottle yields another Tylenol mystery

CHICAGO (UPI) — Investigators searched Wednesday for a middle-aged woman who turned in the most recently discovered bottle of cyanide-laced Tylenol two weeks after seven people were killed by poisoned capsules.

The FBI sought fingerprints on the bottle, the eighth to be found contaminated with the poison. A spokesman said it was not known when the results would be released.

But WBBM-TV in Chicago reported the FBI discovered fingerprints on the box of the bottle. Mort Friedman, a spokesman for the task force investigating the killings, said he would not comment on the report.

Investigators were searching for the woman who turned in the bottle to Wheaton police Oct. 13. Laboratory testing Monday revealed the capsules were tainted.

The woman identified herself as Mrs. Duane Walter of West Chicago, wife of a DuPage County judge. But Mrs. Walter said she did not turn in the bottle and had no idea who used her name.

The woman told police she had purchased the bottle from Frank's Finer Foods in Winfield, the same place where the fatal bottle used by one of the victims, Mary Reiner, was purchased.

Illinois Attorney General Tyrone Fahner, head of the task force investigating the killings, said testing of bottles turned in by consumers should be completed by the end of the week.

The FBI was unsuccessful during the weekend in efforts to find fingerprints from a seventh bottle of tainted capsules.

Six people have cleared themselves in the case by undergoing lie tests, the Chicago Sun-Times said Wednesday.

Fahner was quoted by the City News Bureau of Chicago as saying investigators were "closer than we have ever been" to making an arrest.

However, Paul Zemitsch, spokesman for Fahner, said he doubted Fahner made such a statement.

"I don't think he said that," Zemitsch said.

In Philadelphia, police ruled University of Pennsylvania graduate student William Pascual, 26, committed suicide in April by swallowing a Tylenol capsule containing cyanide. Police said Pascual put the cyanide in the capsule himself.

Police continued the investigation of Roger Arnold, 48, who initially was questioned in the case after a Jewel Food Stores co-worker said Arnold had a white powdery substance in his home, along with books on how to kill people.

'Reagan ranches' growing

A new "Reagan Ranch" sprouted in Memphis Wednesday, joining other tent cities of poor and jobless around the country demonstrating against the president's economic policies.

The shantytowns, purposely fashioned after "Hoovervilles" of the Great Depression, were organized by the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now — ACORN.

They were pitched in Boston, New Orleans, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Houston, Denver, Columbus, Ohio, Jersey City, N.J., and Little Rock, Ark.

Still more were planned in Miami and Tampa, Fla., Des Moines, Iowa, Dallas and Albuquerque, N.M., by week's end.

Fair skies replaced rain that had plagued most of the country and kept campers huddled inside their tents. Some vowed to stay put until the general election Nov. 2, an off-year election seen as a referendum on Reagan's attempts to improve the economy.

What's what

Q. Years ago you ran a puzzle about three hunters who paid $30 for a motel room, then got a refund. How did that go?

A. I remember. Three hunters paid $30 to the room clerk. He later realized he only should have charged them $25. He gave five $1 bills to the bellboy to refund. The bellboy couldn't figure out how to split $5 into three, so he kept $2 and gave $1 back to each hunter. That meant each paid $9. But three times nine is 27. And the bellboy only kept $2. What happened to the other $1?

Q. Doesn't the U.S. Mint turn out coins for a lot of countries other than this one?

A. No, sir, only for Panama and the Dominican Republic, that's all.

Q. Why is a duffel bag called that?

A. Because it originated in Duffel, Belgium.

TWIN BEDS

Twin beds were invented to help the nobles survive hot weather. They were castle furniture. The British designer Thomas Sheraton so stated. It never occurred to him that peasants might want twin beds. Peasants nested. You don't nest in twin beds, he thought.

Little boat fails to cross Atlantic

HULL, (Mass. (UPI) — Another 3,398 miles and he would have made it to England, fame and possibly fortune.

But the fates and Mother Nature simply refused to let Wayne Dickenson come close to approaching the desired goal — sailing 3,400 miles across the Atlantic to England in the smallest boat possible.

The 38-year-old Satellite Beach, Fla., man was trying to set a world's record by making the trek in an 8-foot, 11-inch kyack-type sailboat, but in two-and-a-half days, he never made it out of sight of the Massachusetts coast.

Dickenson shoved off from Boston Harbor Marina in Quincy in "God's Tear" Sunday afternoon as about 50 spectators wished him bon voyage.

He built the boat himself for $26,000. It is equipped with solar panels to charge the radio and other electrical equipment.

The Coast Guard Tuesday towed Dickenson's craft about two miles to the Point Allerton Coast Guard station after receiving several calls from persons who spotted the boat offshore.

"He was only a couple of miles offshore due east of Hull," said Coast Guard spokesman Craig Wellman. "He never got out of U.S. waters."

Wellman said 10-to 12-foot seas and 20-knot winds lashed at Dickenson's vessel with such severity that rescuers had trouble hooking up the tow line.

"The weather hampered the tow. It took about four or five hours to get him in," Wellman said.

"He said he was going to forget the trip and try again next year," Wellman said.

Alberto Salazar presents Reagan with a pair of running shoes

Reagan salutes marathon winners

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan brought the winners of the New York Marathon to the White House Wednesday to salute them for their courage and endurance.

"I do five minutes a day on a treadmill, then walk away very slowly," the president said in comparing his own running routine to what he called the "incomprehensible" exploits of Alberto Salazar, Grete Waitz and Linda Down on their victories in the 26-mile, 385-yard course.

Salazar won his third consecutive New York race in 2 hours 9 minutes, and Ms. Waitz of Norway won the women's division for the fourth time in the past five years with a time of 2 hours 27 minutes.

Reagan saved his best compliment for Miss Down, 25, a victim of cerebral palsy who on Sunday became the first woman to finish the Marathon on crutches. The free-lance writer, soon to begin her doctoral studies, has been afflicted with cerebral palsy for years.

The president said she showed "more heart and courage" than the able-bodied racers and signifies "more victory than victim."

"Although I was the tortoise in the race, I felt honored to be an American and a woman," she said during the brief ceremonies in the warm sunshine of the Rose Garden.

Miss Waitz said she was "very honored" to be at the White House and said she hoped her presence there "can be an inspiration for female athletes."

Bureaucrat eateries draw 'Golden Fleece'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — For letting government "big-shots" dine in restaurants subsidized by taxpayers, the Office of Management and Budget won the October Golden Fleece awarded Wednesday by Sen. William Proxmire.

The Wisconsin Democrat, who gives the dubious distinction monthly to "the most ridiculous, wasteful or ironic use of the taxpayer's money," said the Treasury pays some $2.4 million a year to subsidize about 82 percent of the cost of meals in the 22 executive branch dining rooms.

"Wouldn't it be nice if every taxpayer could walk into a swanky restaurant and have Uncle Sam pick up 82 percent of the tab like these officials?" Proxmire asked.

The senator said "letting government big-shots eat high off the hog ... is particularly ironic since the president has directed that those who specifically benefit from government subsidies should be required to pay the full costs of that subsidy."

Military brass and top civilian bureaucrats are paying only $513,000 a year for their meals.

A spokesman said OMB had no comment.

Proxmire, ranking Democrat on the Senate Appropriations Comittee, said the biggest offender is the Pentagon, with six private dining rooms for the secretary, the chiefs of staff and civilian service chiefs among others.

The Pentagon, he said, spends almost $2.2 million to operate the dining rooms, with its users paying only $366,400 for the food — a subsidy of $1.8 million, or about 82 percent.

Heaters spark heated debate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A dispute between a publisher and a manufacturer about pollution from portable kerosene home heaters flared Wednesday at a Consumer Products Safety Commission hearing on the popular heaters used by 6 million Americans.

The pollution issue, being studied by the commission that twice has refused to ban the heaters, features a dispute between a major maker of the heaters, Kero-Sun Inc., and Consumer Reports magazine, sued for libel by the manufacturer.

"We have been concerned about kerosene heaters for some time," said spokeswoman Carol Young of the government commission.

"There is a potential fire hazard and a potential pollution hazard with them," she said, adding that the hearings are to get data on the problem.

When the commission rejected the requests to ban the heaters, she said, it "had insufficient information at that time that warranted banning. We are testing the heaters right now."

Testifying before the agency were Consumers Union, publisher of "Consumer Reports" magazine; Underwriters Laboratories, the major U.S. facility for testing portable kerosene heaters; the International Association of Fire Chiefs; the National Kerosene Heaters Association, the American Petroleum Institute; and the Fire Marshalls of North America.

Consumer Reports, in its October issue, charged that even when used according to manufacturers instructions, kerosene heaters can expose people to pollution levels that would never be permitted outdoors.

Administration refused to clean up PCB spill

By GREGORY GORDON
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The administration, urged by the Public Health Service to order an immediate cleanup of an Arkansas residential area soaked with toxic PCBs, concluded there is "no basis" for emergency action, it was disclosed Wednesday.

The Environmental Defense Fund released internal Environmental Protection Agency documents on the Fort Smith, Ark., case and charged the agency is "callous and irresponsible" in its approach to toxic wastes.

According to the files, Rita Lavelle, the agency's assistant administrator for solid waste and emergency response, rejected a recommendation from regional EPA officials calling for an immediate cleanup of the most contaminated soil containing up to 13 percent polychlorinated biphenyls, a known carcinogen.

The estimated cleanup cost would have been $258,443, an EPA regional memo said.

Officials with the non-profit environmental group noted that the government's cleanup fund for hazardous waste sites has a surplus of more than $250 million. They said the state considerated the situation so serious it initiated a cleanup the day after EPA's decision against emergency action.

Ellen Silbergeld, the Defense Fund's toxicologist, said that based on EPA's own risk assessment figures, children playing in the contaminated area "would face a 25 percent cancer risk" without a cleanup.

Studies have concluded that PCBs, highly persistent compounds often found in electrical transformers, have been associated with skin diseases, birth deformities, sterility, liver diseases and cancer.

Ms. Lavelle said in a telephone interview that the Arkansas decision was based on a "risk assessment," that it was a "hard decision" and that similar waste sites are denied emergency action every day.

She criticized the defense fund, saying it "might be better served by discussing these matters (with EPA) first rather than unduly alarming affected public."

Sources told United Press International that Ms. Lavelle based her decision on the recommendation of Dr. Arthur Paiotta, a toxicologist who serves as an EPA consultant and her science adviser. Paiotta's recent enforcement decisions are being investigated by a House energy and commerce subcommittee headed by Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., congressional sources said.

"This was not a unilateral decision by Art Paiotta," Ms. Lavelle said. "I happen to be capable of making judgments and I brought in experts from across the agency. There was no dissension once I made the decision."

The PCBs at Fort Smith contaminated an area where the late W.R. "Bill" Gramlich lived. An electric company worker, he brought home drums of waste oil and used it for years in pesticide sprays and for dust control on his property and surroundings.

It apparently was not known at the time that the oil was laden with PCBs.

Congressman says EPA lax on cleanup effort

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Reagan administration is spending "only a small fraction" of the money targeted for a massive clean-up of the nation's 400 worst toxic waste dump sites, Rep. James Florio, D-N.J., charged Wednesday.

Florio said he obtained documents from the Environmental Protection Agency showing it has spent $88 million for waste dump clean-up under the much-heralded "Superfund," which now has a $364 million surplus.

Prompted by discoveries of hazardous waste sites such as the Love Canal neighborhood in Niagara Falls, N.Y., Superfund is a congressionally mandated effort to clean up the 400 worst dumps within five years.

"For the first time EPA has made accurate figures available that directly and indisputably contradict its public claims of making 'exceptional progress' in cleaning up the nation's most hazardous waste sites," said Florio, chairman of a House energy and commerce subcommittee.

"The EPA's own data demonstrate that only a small fraction of the funds collected to date have actually been expended for Superfund activities; 97 sites have failed to receive even an informal allocation," he added.

Rita Lavelle, assistant EPA administrator in charge of Superfund activity, said the effort "frankly is taking a lot longer than we thought. But it's not due to any lack of will, the technology is hard to come by."

In an inteview, she argued Superfund expenditures have been low because the EPA is in an early phase of the program mainly involving less expensive inspection and review procedures, rather than costly clean-up activity.

However, Florio asserted the administration is "playing nothing less than a cynical shell game with the American public regarding the nation's serious hazardous waste problem."

The Great Eagle

A tribute to Dr. James L. Taylor

Where eagles dare
Others fear to fly.

Where eagles stand
Lesser mortals tremble.

Where eagles dream
Others cannot aspire.

Where eagles fly
The wings of others waver.

Where eagles land
Others would not attempt.

Where eagles nest
Ordinary men cannot breath.

Where eagles see
Others are sightless.

Where eagles soar
Other creatures cannot ascend.

Where eagles care
Few understand.

"Doc" Taylor on failure: "I've been temporarily held up on several occasions, but I never lost."

Despite cutbacks, Taylor's still optimistic

TWIN FALLS — Since the beginning, the College of Southern Idaho and its president, James L. "Doc" Taylor, have been inseparable in the minds of residents, legislators and educators in Idaho.

Times-News reporter Glen Warchol, who covers CSI, interviewed Taylor last week on the past and the future of CSI.

Times-News: Are you satisfied with CSI? Has it become what you had in mind 16 years ago?

Taylor: This is exactly what I had in mind. I feel that some of the things we could have done, we have not completed.

What would those be?

Greater work with students who are infirmed, to give them a better chance. You wonder how many of those kids wind up with a salable skill. How come those kids don't have programs that meet their societal needs?

Have you given up on achieving that?

We won't ever let things stop us. We are just as enthusiastic about these programs (for the handicapped) as we have ever been. We just need to be more successful in obtaining funding sources.

Do you think that the current funding problems at the state and federal level will seriously limit what CSI will be doing in the next few years?

That poses some problems. I think that we just have to work harder to get more done in that area (funding). It is, of course, easy to say, "Let's drop a program. Let's drop some personnel." Hell, anyone can do that. That won't help anybody.

So you think you'll be able to keep your programs intact?

And operating better.

I've often been accused of being optimistic.

In the early years of CSI, did you ever think the college might fail? After all, its predecessor in Buhl (Southern Idaho College) folded.

I didn't come here to do something that was going to fall apart.

I was going to do enough hard work to see to it that we wound up with a successful college. We sold the concept of a comprehensive community college. It only took about a year, 16 months before we got enough people to believe we could run a college out here.

What do you mean by a "comprehensive community college"?

I think that a comprehensive community college, No. 1, has a very strong academic program.

No. 2, it has a real strong counseling program.

And it provides courses off the campus in outlying centers.

We provide specialized services, such as the Laotian program, deaf interpreting, the Mideast program and the elderly system (Retired Service Volunteer Program).

We feel very strongly that we ought to reach out into the community.

Historically speaking, you didn't hear many people talking about comprehensive community colleges (when CSI was started). In fact, nationally, only about 50 percent of educators believed strongly in the concept. Most of them don't understand it.

I know of at least two times a year that I give this bit of information to my faculty and staff. We get more and more people who believe in what I believed in 25 years ago.

What were your thoughts when you accepted the position as the president of a non-existent community college in the Magic Valley?

It was this chance to build a comprehensive community college. And you were kind of lonely out here because there were not many good colleges in the area.

CSI grew from some farm land on the edge of town into a college with a $42 million assessed value that makes extensive use of alternate energy sources. Where did it all come from?

I would say that, in that respect, I was a doer. And being a doer, I was able to get some federal monies that other schools didn't get.

There's about 10 things I want to do not too far off: build a raceway hatchery for catfish; then I'm going to build a fresh-water shrimp facility and one for exotic fish with this geothermal water that I've already used (in heating buildings on campus).

How did you manage to bring so much government money to CSI?

I think I'm a hard worker. A hard worker is being a doer. You've got to believe real strong in your own abilities. I would say that I have degrees of charisma. (Laughter from CSI staff in the room). Well, that's what it is!

I deal with all kinds of people. And I think that is within itself an accomplishment.

You have to make people believe you are going to get it done.

Does that explain your success at "grantsmanship?"

That's kind of gamesmanship. You seek out grants. You know the guidelines for making application. Then you plan what's going to be of help as you proceed after that money. There's a lot of people that don't fill out applications, who don't know the road to follow.

In seeking out funds and grants, I would say that the one thing that would stand out would be my ability to work with people who work with the federal government.

I have as many rooters in the federal government as anybody. When something came up, they would call me, give me some direction.

How did you develop that relationship with people in the federal government?

I put out a lot of b.s.

What kind of effect does that have on government bureaucrats?

Well, all I can say, is in working with people and talking with people, they got involved in what I had in mind. Some people believed in me very strongly, that I could do anything I wanted to. In being able to do that, we were able to get a lot of funds and money nobody else got.

Did you pull off any especially memorable funding coups?

I did something deliberate. It was illegal. That is, I took a Housing and Urban Redevelopment grant and put it into a building, and (U.S.) Office of Education funds into the same building. You can't do that, but I did. I was able to do it by making it into two buildings.

The administration building?

Yes. By using a percentage formula, I made the common areas the bathrooms and the foyer. That became a 39 percent O.E. and 42 percent HUD project.

I was able to do it, No. 1, because it had never been done before. And No. 2, I convinced them that this would be more logical. To my knowledge, we've never raised one question about it in anyone's mind.

Has there ever been a time that you failed to get something you wanted?

I don't remember that word ever coming up. I don't ever remember failing at what I set out to do. I've been temporarily held up on several occasions, but I never lost.

Have you ever been in any exceptionally difficult situations?

The first 10 or 12 years I was here, no one ever came around to bother me. And then we began to develop some people that were excited about getting into the act of publicity on such things as sex bias, age bias — discrimination.

We've had a few moments on those things, but by and large, we haven't had anything that you would say was a dogfight.

Would you ever like to see the school become a four-year institution?

Two or three years ago, that was a question that was asked of me often. I don't know whether I've indoctrinated them, or they've forgotten, but I don't have many people ask that question lately. Hell, I've told enough people I'm opposed to that.

It would be a different philosophy. I think that Idaho has too many four-year schools. I think there has to be one real good school in the state at the community-college level.

Do you have any plans to retire?

I got a note on my age the other day. I didn't believe it. I would imagine it won't be too long.

Do you think you've laid down a solid foundation, fiscally and philosophically, that will keep the college going?

I hope that I have. I'll tell you one thing. That (guy) who cuts the weeds — he'll keep the grounds clean. But whether anything else happens. I don't know, but he'll be out there cutting the grass and keeping the floors clean.

I believe in it (keeping the grounds immaculate) so stongly and all my staff knows how I feel about it. You even see students picking up cans or paper.

In the past the ability of CSI to nail down funds came in great part from your — to use your word — "b.s.'ing" ability. After you retire, how will that void in "charisma" be filled?

I may have to start giving them lessons.

I've always managed to do what I wanted, except get rich.

How important is it to get rich?

Well, I'll tell you. In this day and age, money really doesn't mean a whole hell of a lot. When you've got the wolves away from the door, it doesn't matter much. I determined it was a lot of b.s.

After giving hundreds of commencement speeches, what advice would you give a graduate?

I'd like everybody to give everybody the realization that life is what you make out of it.

Taylor tribute

Mrs. Betty Taylor really is 'the lady behind the man'

"We made a rule early in our marriage that we both wouldn't get mad at the same time. It works pretty good, although it makes one of us irate to have the other laughing during an argument."

— Betty Taylor

By GLEN WARCHOL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Betty Taylor has an Oklahoma twang in her speech and that down-to-earth quality of grace that emerges when gentility of the Old South has been tempered with the hard times of the Dustbowl.

The combination produced a woman sensitive enough to encourage the dreams of James L. "Doc" Taylor, the driving force behind the College of Southern Idaho, yet strong enough to contain her husband's often grandiose ego.

No one knows the man better. They married when she was 16 and he was 18. They have shared a life together that made CSI its crowning achievement.

Persons who have known the Taylors since they arrived in Buhl in 1963, say that while "Doc's" drive built the college, only Betty could buttress the towering educator and help him focus his overwhelming energy on the task.

"He couldn't have done it without her," says Bob Blastock, a CSI trustee since the college began. "She was his home base — his check point — where he'd find out where he was going."

Betty is not a woman who can be pigeon-holed easily. She always has avoided the spotlight that illuminated her husband. Consequently, many people are unaware of the quiet woman in the shadows. Yet, she has power over him that amazes even people that know the couple well.

"She was never bowled over by his b.s.," Blastock says. "When he got a little carried away with himself, she'd just quietly say, 'James!' and he'd tone down."

Betty always has understood better than anyone else the depth of her husband's dreams and ambitions.

"He's always had a gigantic drive to accomplish things," she says. "He's never through with a project. He is always thinking of ways to improve on it or to have more of it."

That kind of personal energy can be hard on a wife and a family, however. In the mid-1960's, when the college amounted to little more than "a briefcase in a motel room" and a pessimistic group of voters, her husband was almost a stranger in his own home.

"James doesn't require much sleep," Betty says. "I remember when they passed the bond issue. I never saw him. That wasn't unusual. When something needs to get done, he gets it done."

She's had 39 years to adapt to the singlemindedness of her husband. He was a freshman in college when they married, but withdrew to support the family.

"We were young, we had no money and we had a daughter. You'd better believe it was rough."

It was about that time that he began developing his management acumen.

"He managed a billiard parlor," Betty says. "He did all the janitorial work. He even resurfaced the tables when they needed it."

An equal amount of the family's income came from Betty, who worked nine hours a day as a clerk at a department store and a supermarket, and as a telephone operator.

During that time, Taylor returned to college. A grinding routine of working and going to class developed. It continued until he finally earned his doctorate in 1962.

With the ink barely dry on his diploma, Taylor accepted a job with the ill-fated Southern Idaho College in Buhl. He was to be its dean.

Things went badly for the college almost immediately, and after a year it failed.

Betty found herself far from Oklahoma, with her husband unemployed. She remembers that in just a year, southern Idaho had become their home. She didn't want to pull up roots again.

When Betty talks about the SIC catastrophe, you get a sense of the roots of her husband's confidence.

"It was just a little stumbling block," she says of SIC's collapse. "We always felt that we had each other, and where there's a will, there's a way.

"When things go wrong, you don't just sit on your can. You get up and work. Sometimes a boulder gets in the road. You either go around it, or through it. "Doc" usually likes to go through it."

After all attempts to resurrect SIC had failed, Taylor accepted a job as a dean at a South Dakota teachers' college. But he kept in touch with friends in the Magic Valley who still were trying to build a junior college in the area.

"We never thought about not coming back," Betty says. "The time we were in Buhl, we knew we liked the area. We had already found out how wonderful the people were."

When her husband's friends in the valley, people like Blastock, John Barker, John Colefman and Bill Wiseman, felt they were ready to gamble on another junior college, they called Taylor and asked him to apply for a leading role. In February 1965, they hired him as president of what was to become CSI. Actually, they had hired a team — "Doc" and Betty.

Betty shrugs off any idea that her traditional role as wife would be less than fulfilling.

"He was the one who was making the living for the family. I just tried to make the living worth living.

"I'm satisfied with our life. I think I've helped him accomplish things — the things that he wanted and that I wanted."

What's ahead?

State funding cutbacks, Taylor's health pose concerns

By GLEN WARCHOL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Sixteen years of explosive growth at the College of Southern Idaho may be stunted as the college enters a valley of funding shadows.

"I would say the next couple years will be extremely challenging," says Jerry Meyerhoeffer, CSI's vice president.

"In the last three years, the college has had to pay back money (to the state). This year, we've returned 8.5 percent to date. There's a strong feeling of additional paybacks coming."

The state found itself with a shortage this spring, and it called back a substantial amount of funding from higher education. CSI, which is 40 percent state-funded, had to slash its budget by almost $400,000.

The returned funds have meant cuts in hiring and lost staff positions. But by increasing fees and tuition, and by careful belt-tightening, the reduced funding hasn't shown outwardly on CSI's campus or programs.

Over the long haul, however, damage has been done, Meyerhoeffer says.

The regular maintenance schedule at the college has been dropped, and buildings will begin to deteriorate under the limited spot-maintenance program that the college has been forced to adopt.

Moreover, every budget at CSI has been trimmed to the bone to meet the cutback, Meyerhoeffer says. With all the fat gone, additional cuts will have to be taken on the chin.

"It's our feeling if they ask for more paybacks, it is very possible that a whole program will be cut," he says.

Another option open to the college is to cut back the quality of education in all programs. But that is something Meyerhoeffer says is out of the question.

BOB BLASTOCK
"We can't replace him"

JERRY MEYERHOEFFER
"He provides leadership"

'Without 'Doc,' probably we'll be on the same level as the other Idaho colleges and universities. Right now, we're miles ahead.'
— CSI Trustee Bob Blastock

"The problem is that over a period of 17 years you grow to meet certain needs," he says. "Now, it's difficult to see things being torn down."

Solutions to the problem vary, he says, but they all involve increased taxes somewhere.

One idea is to have all the counties in CSI's junior-college district contribute to the college, since to some extent they all benefit through the improved economy that is provided by the school's existence.

Currently, only Jerome and Twin Falls counties levy a tax to help support the institution. Gooding, Blaine, Cassia, Minidoka, and Lincoln counties, which also are included in the district, don't support CSI directly.

People don't realize the economic impact a college has on a region, Meyerhoeffer says.

"When you think about how much we worked with industry to help bring it into the community — besides what we do on campus in vocational education."

Meyerhoeffer says another funding idea that CSI officials would like investigated is dividing the entire state into taxing areas for all colleges and universities, similar to the junior-college district system. Again, that would provide a way for the communities that benefit from nearby colleges and universities to return a larger share of support, similar to the relationship between Jerome and Twin Falls counties and CSI.

"Our two counties pay for CSI," he says. "But they also pay for the other universities and colleges in the state."

Part of the uncertainty of CSI's future lies with President James L. Taylor. After a severe illness last winter, he says that his retirement will not be far off.

The question is, how well can CSI get along without Taylor's legendary charisma and political connections that have translated directly into funding for CSI?

"He provides great leadership and direction," Meyerhoeffer says. "I like to think that will continue."

Meyerhoeffer says that the board of trustees will be able to continue building on the foundations that "Doc" has laid. The college has developed a reputation nationwide that goes beyond Taylor's influence, he says.

"We can't replace him," says Bob Blastock, a CSI trustee. "There's only one like him. But the thing is, the program is there. Without "Doc," probably we'll be on the same level as the other Idaho colleges and universities.

"Right now, we're miles ahead."

In typical fashion, Taylor announced one day that CSI would create a national championship basketball team

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — There was never any doubt in James "Doc" Taylor's mind about where the College of Southern Idaho basketball program was aimed.

He wasn't willing to settle for anything but the top.

In many respects, he's realized that goal.

CSI won the national title in 1976 and has been runner-up twice, 1970 and 1975. It has participated in the national playoffs at Hutchinson, Kan., seven times.

CSI holds the longest winning record in junior-college history.

It has had 23 individuals drafted by NBA teams.

In its first year, it became the first junior-college team, as an entity, to earn a berth in the national AAU tournament in Denver.

CSI has served as a stepping stone for coaches and athletes to go to the top of their profession and win national honors, individually and collectively.

But on that night in the spring of 1966 when Taylor came to The Times-News to announce the establishment of a "nationally prominent basketball program," he gave his definition of what one is.

"To win nationals twice in a row. That's it," he said. "Any team can win it once. But when you win it back to back, you have established the program as one of the nation's best."

It was, as I recall, about the first night of the spring we'd left the door open to catch any vagrant breezes that might wander by.

It was about 7 p.m., early by any sports-page standards for things to happen.

With a briefcase under his arm, Taylor strolled through the door and said he had an announcement.

"We are going to establish a national-class basketball program at CSI starting this fall," he said. "I don't know who the coach will be, and I certainly don't know who the players will be. But it won't surprise me if we go back to Hutchinson next spring for the national tournament."

Taylor likes to drop little guesses like that.

"Everything's going to be first cabin," he said, opening the briefcase and pulling out a dollar-and-cents formula that was supposed to add up to national championships.

> 'At any college, if the president wants to have a successful athletic program, he'll get one.'
> — 'Doc' Taylor

It didn't take long to ascertain that the bottom line didn't add up to the conclusions of excellence that Taylor had drawn.

"Don't worry about that. We can adjust that if we need to," he'd answer questions about specific items — like $12,000 for scholarships.

"Don't worry about that," he'd say when pressed for an answer on who the coach will be. "I've got plenty of friends who know good coaches when they see them, and I can make a few calls and get a good one."

"Don't worry about that," he'd say when asked if there would be sufficient practice time available at the high-school gymnasium.

"One of the first things we're going to do at the new campus is build a gymnasium. A gymnasium, now, not a fieldhouse. That will come later."

Finally, after going over several other points, Taylor, exaggerating a furtive look both ways to make sure no one was watching, reopened the briefcase and with a broad smile, said, "This is something no one else has seen — not even the trustees."

He allowed himself a laugh over that line.

But one look at the second total and, yes, CSI was indeed preparing to make a bold dash toward national basketball prominence.

During that revealing and humorous hour, however, Taylor did make one salient point that we've found to be true.

"It doesn't matter how much money you're ready to spend; it doesn't matter who the coach is. To be successful in any sport on the high-school or college level, the top man has to be deeply interested in it," Taylor said. "At any college, if the president wants to have a successful athletic program, he'll get one.

He went on to explain that in CSI's case, a strong move into intercollegiate athletics was the "binder" needed to pull the school, enrollment and the Magic Valley together.

At that time, CSI meant attending night classes at Twin Falls High School. The students had no common meeting place socially, no common focal point.

At the same time, the community was wondering what it had wrought with its vote to bring CSI into existence. There were provincial bickerings concerning the site of the college. The intercourse between the academic and business communities was uneven at best.

Convinced that a strong basketball team would improve all these problems, Taylor put himself in charge of things. He organized a booster group and cajoled and bullied it into picking up a mortgage for a house on 11th Avenue East, which became CSI's first dormitory — albeit an athletic dormitory.

To fill it, he wangled furniture and household necessities from area businessmen and then talked electricians, plumbers, painters, carpenters, etc. into providing the time — and in a lot of cases, the materials — for converting the residence into a dormitory.

In the meantime, his Oklahoma connections put him in contact with the head basketball coach at Tulsa Central High School. And somehow, not even understood by the "victim" today, he got Eddie Sutton's signature on a contract.

"I kept saying 'let's go take a look at the campus,' and Doc would change the subject to something else. I was signed and out of town before I found out there wasn't a campus," Sutton says, laughing about it now.

Of course, Taylor's intention of going to the national tournament in Hutchinson the first year wasn't possible. A school has to be a member of the NJCAA for one full year before it is eligible for post-season competition.

But Sutton and a motley crew assembled from area high schools, Oklahoma high schools, college transfers and ex-servicemen did get to the national AAU tournament.

Sutton promptly was named national AAU coach of the year. In a little over 11 months, all of Taylor's seemingly facetious predictions had come true.

And, it must be said, that despite the fact he never high-profiled himself at basketball games — indeed he has missed many more than he has seen — no one keeps closer tabs on the inner workings of the basketball program.

First three coaches will return to help honor their boss

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Three men who have accounted for nearly 75 percent of all College of Southern Idaho basketball wins will be on hand tonight to honor CSI President James L. Taylor.

Eddie Sutton, currently basketball coach and assistant athletic director at the University of Arkansas, started the program, and in three years, he posted an 82-14 mark.

He was followed into Twin Falls by a former Oklahoma A and M teammate, Jerry Hale, who was 160-22 in five years.

The winningest coach in the school's history came third — Boyd Grant, now at Fresno State, going 96-6 in three years.

In all, CSI has had six coaches, including incumbent Dave Campbell, and it has a 16-year won-lost record of 465-78.

Mike Mitchell, currently assistant coach at Oklahoma City U., was 55-10 in three years; Tom Weirich, currently in private business in Twin Falls, was 16-14; and Campbell's two-year total is 56-12.

Along with Weirich, Hale no longer is in coaching, having joined an oil-drilling firm out of Tulsa. He serves as a public-relations man and trouble-shooter, and travels throughout the world as its representative.

Sutton, who came to CSI after seven years as the coach at Tulsa Central High School, led his first team to the National AAU tournament in Denver, but he never quite reached the NJCAA finals in Hutchinson. He left the year the NJCAA created Region 18 (Idaho, Washington and Oregon) by splitting it away from Region I (Utah-Arizona).

In his second year, Sutton won the sub-regional tournament and advanced to regionals, only to be beaten in the finals by then-Boise Junior College. One of his great disappointments came in his final season, when the Golden Eagles lost to North Idaho in Coeur d'Alene for the right to go to nationals. He already pretty well had decided at that point to become head coach at Creighton University in Omaha.

> 'Grant, if I give you this job, will you guarantee me 95 percent wins?'
> — 'Doc' Taylor

After a four-year stay there, he moved on to Arkansas, where he turned that football-rabid state into a basketball power. He has taken his team to the NCAA playoffs almost every year and reached the final four.

Sutton, who has turned down several offers to coach in the NBA, has been named the AAU coach of the year and the NCAA coach of the year.

His successor, Hale, almost took CSI to the top. Hale established the New York-Washington, D.C., connection, and for five years, he ran several professional draftees through the CSI program.

He took his first team to nationals in 1969-70 and finished eighth. The following year, after being ranked No. 1 in the country most of the season, CSI climbed to the national finals, only to be turned back by Ellsworth, Iowa. Many have pronounced that team perhaps the best junior-college five ever assembled — with the possible exception of the Trinidad, Colo., team of three years earlier that boasted Spencer Hayward.

Hale, on records of 29-4 and 30-5, returned to Hutchinson the next two seasons, finishing fourth in 1971-72 and going unplaced in 1973. Arizona Western, winning the best of three series in overtime of the third game of a bi-regional playoff, prevented him from making his fifth straight trip to Hutchinson.

On the second day of the national tournament in 1974, he was paged off the arena floor for a phone call. It was from Oral Roberts, and by the end of the week, Hale had become head coach at Oral Roberts University in Tulsa. He had three consecutive 19-game or better winning seasons there before leaving to begin his current career.

It was rather a homecoming when Boyd Grant assumed direction of the CSI basketball program.

Born in Bancroft and attending high school at American Falls, Grant had left Idaho as a junior college player at Snow College. From there, he moved to Colorado State for an 11-year stint as assistant coach and then served two seasons as an aide to Joe Hall at Kentucky.

Admitting that Hale and Sutton were tough acts to follow, Grant then went out and bested them.

His Eagles were 27-3 in his first season and advanced to the finals in the national tournament. They lost to Western Texas.

The next season, with a mixture of returning sophomores, a couple of bright freshmen prospects and three NCAA college transfers, the Eagles came up with their best record, 34-1, and capped that by winning the national championship.

That team won 17 in a row, lost in overtime at Snow College, and then won the next 17 to bring home the title trophy.

The following season, with an entirely new lineup, Grant kept that streak going through the season, the regional and one game into the national tournament. After 48 in a row, a national record, CSI was dumped and then lost its next game to go unplaced.

When Taylor decided to hire Grant, he said something like, "Grant, if I give you this job, will you guarantee me 95 percent wins?"

Grant replied that he felt that was an attainable limit and signed the contract.

But he missed; his winning percentage was "only" .941.

Grant, who had flirted with the Wyoming job and had an eye on the Colorado job the previous year, then moved on to Fresno State, where he has transformed that program into a national contender.

He took the Bulldogs to the NCAA playoffs this year and took the town by storm when he led them into the top 10 in the national rankings.

'Doc's' talk sold the concept and helped build the school

By GLEN WARCHOL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The acorn that was to become the College of Southern Idaho originally fell on rocky — and somewhat shady — soil.

Leaders in the Magic Valley always had wanted a junior college to meet the educational needs of the community and to contribute to the economic growth in the region.

"People of the community wanted a college in the area," says Bob Blastock, a CSI trustee. "Boise is some hundred miles west; Pocatello is some hundred miles the other way. There's a lot of kids who couldn't afford to go away to school."

The first real start at higher education in the valley was the Idaho Technical Institute in Buhl, which in its one-year existence changed its name to Southern Idaho College.

In an unpublished article that CSI President James L. "Doc" Taylor wrote for Readers' Digest in 1978, he recounted that other than the solid, abandoned building that housed it, SIC was little more than a "figment of the imagination" of its president, Dr. G.A. Strutz, and the hopes of the people of Buhl.

The article states that within two months after arriving, the 14 young faculty members of the college found themselves without their first paychecks and nearly without students. Of the 200 students Strutz had promised, 27 had enrolled.

A few telephone calls found that Strutz's credentials were, at least in part, fraudulent. He had no doctorate.

Under pressure from the community and the faculty for Strutz to relinquish financial control of the floundering college, the mysterious man left town.

SIC was held together until the year's end through the efforts of the Buhl community.

An attempt to establish a junior-college district in Twin Falls County to support SIC failed, and the faculty of the college scattered to find other jobs. Taylor moved to North Dakota to serve as the dean of a state teachers' college.

Two years later, Taylor received a call to interview for the job of president of a new junior college being planned in Twin Falls — to be named the College of Southern Idaho. In spite of the disaster at SIC, he returned.

"That (SIC) was a horse of a different color," Taylor says. "I had no thought that CSI wouldn't work."

Even at that date, Taylor, who by most standards still was an inexperienced college administrator, had a philosophy for a junior college in the Magic Valley that he was sure would be accepted by southern Idahoans.

Taylor wanted to build a "comprehensive" community college. He argued for a college that not only would meet the educational needs of the community through academic and vocational training, but also would be at the center of community and social-service programs.

Taylor saw CSI as the workable "loop" of higher education — flexibly providing for the needs of its community, however they might evolve. There would be no ivory towers at CSI.

"It only took about a year — 16 months before we got enough people to believe we could run a college out here," Taylor says. "We sold the concept of a comprehensive community college."

According to Blastock, those first 16 months were some of the hardest in the lives of the board of trustees. It was in those early months that Taylor's special gifts emerged — including little need for sleep.

"Jeez, I don't know how he stood the strain," Blastock says. "We had meetings three times a week. We'd meet until 2 or 3 in the morning, and he'd be up talking to the Kiwanis at 6."

Ironically, because the concept of a two-year institution was unfamiliar to state officials, Blastock says that the Magic Valley group was given a free hand in designing CSI.

But the ranchers, farmers and businessmen who comprised the board of trustees were not altogether comfortable with the freedom.

"None of us on the board knew anything about running a college," Blastock says. "We were babes in arms."

He says that Taylor didn't know a great deal more about colleges than the board did — but it didn't slow the big man down.

"He's a mover; he's got drive," Blastock says. "He has an ego you just can't shake. He's going to be the best."

Taylor made his philosophy of building a college clear to the board.

"We are going to build a college, and it's going to be first-class," Taylor told the amazed trustees. "No one ever complains about going first-class. But you damn well better give them first-class."

Taylor's remarkable success in building a $42 million college in less that two decades on a site that was once a cow pasture came largely from his ability to fit into the community, Blastock believes.

In an area where outsiders are viewed with suspicion, Taylor was accepted as a kindred spirit. Some people say that he and his wife were southern Idahoans who by some horrible mixup had been born in Oklahoma.

"He was just fit for this area," Blastock says. "He was just country folk. I think that's why he liked it here."

State Sen. John Barker, R-Buhl, remembers with amusement Taylor exaggerating his "country" background with great success on legislators.

"'I'm just an old country boy from Oklahoma,' he'd say," Barker recalls. "'Will you give me a little money to beef up my vo-tech program? Just give me whatever you can spare. Just some crumbs.'"

"I heard fellows walk out of the meeting saying, 'Doc Taylor's just a country boy trying to keep that college going. Let's help him out.'"

Of course, the intense president, with his Oklahoma accent and his tendency to call a spade a spade — among other things — often took a little getting used to. Especially when Taylor button-holed residents on Main Avenue and lectured them on his favorite subject — the advantages of a comprehensive community college.

"A lot of people said, 'What in the heck are you guys doing, picking him for president?'" Blastock remembers, smiling.

The idea of a two-year college had caught on by the summer of 1965 — some say it was only because people were tired of hearing Taylor make speeches.

Eighteen faculty members were hired and that fall, classes were held for 540 students. Taylor pushed the college out of the crawling stage and directly into a shaky run.

Now with 4,500 students and a $42 million campus, the Oklahoma country boy is still calling the cadence.

Keith Sligar, an area businessman, remembers the first time he encountered Taylor.

"I remember saying, 'Where'd they get that stupid S.O.B.'"

Taylor was questioning Sligar closely on geothermal wells.

"One of these days, we're going to heat this college with hot water," Doc told him.

"The college was only six months old," Sligar says. "He hadn't been here six months, and he was planning how to use hot water."

Sligar just shakes his head now when he talks about his first impression of the man.

"People said, 'Ol' Doc's got a lot of wind,'" Sligar remembers. "But it takes a lot of wind to get a kite up, and Doc's is still flying."

Convention center grand opening set at expanded motel

Burley Inn will demonstrate its 'product'

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — How do you convince an organization that your convention center is THE place to hold its gathering?

The answer is to simulate a convention and show the groups what you can do. At least that's the approach of the Burley Inn, which will hold a grand opening of its expanded convention center and motel facilities next week.

The Best Western motel has expanded its facility by 13,000 square feet, including an 8,500-square-foot addition to its convention center, according to manager Carl Boyer.

The coffee shop, banquet kitchen, storage areas and lounge have all undergone expansion. With the cost of the construction on its new Budget Motel next door, the entire project cost the Burley Inn company $2 million, Boyer says.

An invitation-only grand opening activity will be held next Thursday. The convention center staff will show off its talents then. The larger room will be divided into set-ups for a wedding, farm equipment and automobile displays, and other conference activities, Boyer says.

"The room has been designed to handle any kind of occasion," he says. The different displays also will show the flexibility of the rooms, he says.

There also will be samples from the menu available for tasting and to illustrate "how we can serve 800 people in 20 minutes," Boyer says.

Besides a slate of local, county and city dignitaries, potential clients will be invited, Boyer says.

"We intend to book some business," he says.

On Friday and Saturday, the general public will be invited to an open house of the newly-expanded facility from noon to 6 p.m.

The convention center can be broken down into six separate rooms. The entire room has a 1,200-seat capacity. Boyer also is proud of the $14,000 public-address system in the center.

"This is the last word in convention centers," he says.

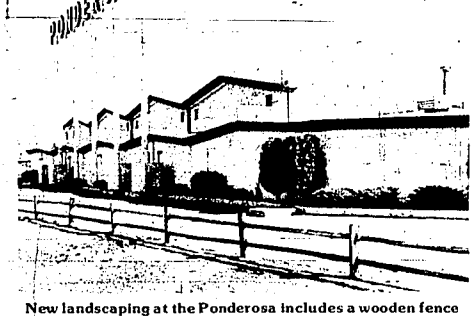
Much of the construction work was handled locally, he says.

At the open house, relatives and friends of the construction workers will have the opportunity to "see what their wives, husbands and sons have been doing," Boyer says.



New landscaping at the Ponderosa includes a wooden fence

....While across the street at the Ponderosa, new owners are trying to salvage a business

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — Through its good times and bad, the Ponderosa Inn has opened its doors and provided motel service to travelers.

Recently, the Ponderosa entered a new phase, with the appearance of new owners and managers who plan on restoring the motel to its past glories.

The new owner of the Ponderosa is Massachusetts General Life Insurance Co., headquartered in Denver.

In March 1978, the insurance company loaned $2.1 million to Ponderosa Inc., according to Twin Falls lawyer Bill Hollifield, who represents Massachusetts General. Hollifield says that because no loan payments were made, the company began foreclosure proceedings a year ago. The action ended in August, with a court judgment in favor of Massachusetts General, which was awarded $3.4 million, he says.

At the time of the proceedings, owner Cal Anglin was managing the motel. Anglin could not be located for comment.

Under foreclosure-law requirements, the Ponderosa had to be put up for public auction, Hollifield says. On Oct. 10, the property was sold to Massachusetts General for $2.7 million. There were no other bidders. The company had hoped someone else might bid, because it was not in the motel business, Hollifield says.

Massachusetts General has contracted with the Otter Corp. to manage the facility, which it has been doing since early August. An Atlanta-based management company, the Otter Corp. currently manages more than 1,500 hotel and motel rooms throughout the United States.

Temporary manager Carl Kiblinger says that his job consists of conducting an inventory of the motel and preparing short-term and long-term plans. Also, there probably will be a name change for the motel.

"I guess we prefer to take a low profile and go and do things," Kiblinger says. One of the priorities was to work with the 50 employees.

"We prefer to work from the inside out," Kiblinger says.

That work includes informing the employees they are working in a stable environment and how the corporation handles matters.

None of the employees have been fired. In fact, Kiblinger says he hopes to hire additional help. The permanent manager, Randy Gill, is expected to arrive soon.

There also will be changes to the physical buildings, which are in poor condition, Kiblinger says.

Initially, $250,000 will be spent to repair electrical, mechanical and other operating equipment, he says. Some of the work has started already, including roofing and heating equipment repairs needed to help the

Scott's backers say she is a woman of backbone and independence

DONNA SCOTT
Has had to work for things

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — She was a young girl when her parents died.

Relatives and neighbors helped her out during that crisis, but essentially, if Donna Scott wanted something she had to work for it.

And somewhere in that less-than-easy beginning, Scott, 47, found the qualities that now are being extolled by incumbent legislators who are supporting her election to their elite assemblage — people like Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly, House Speaker Ralph Olmstead, R-Twin Falls, and Rep. Tom Stivers, R-Twin Falls.

They speak of her as a resourceful woman with "backbone," and they claim she will use that same independence and determination to serve District 25 constituents in the Idaho House.

Scott, a long-time Republican and self-described conservative, is running against Twin Falls Mayor Chris Talkington, an independent candidate, for the post vacated by Olmstead after his unsuccessful primary bid for governor.

Scott comes across as shy and humble when asked to talk about her past and the experiences that molded her into a civic-minded mother of six and the daughter-in-law of the founder of Scott's Refrigeration.

"I'm afraid I always was independence-minded," she says. "I guess some people are just born that way.

"I couldn't accept help from people, but I could accept opportunities — like jobs where I could work and get paid for my labor. The good people around Filer, where I was born, and then in Twin Falls, gave me those opportunities after my parents died."

Throughout high school, Scott juggled school work with two jobs — working in a bakery until 9 p.m. and then spending the rest of her evenings baby-sitting for pay.

"I did marry young, and I guess my father-in-law (Leonard Scott) influenced me a great deal," she recalls. "He'd say, 'Don't give me excuses, I want results.'" — "And frankly, back then, results were what really counted.

"I do have a work ethic. If you want something, you're best off doing it yourself. It's not other people's responsibility to take care of you."

She joined her husband, Jack, in the family business. But mostly she attended to their six children, while "picking up the pieces from the business — like playing nighttime secretary for the 24-hour service calls.

"The business expanded into other states, and then we suddenly hit major financial problems and ended up rebuilding it all over from scratch," Scott says. "Family businesses are very hard on families. Most people involved in them agree on at least one thing: 'Don't do it.'"

Perhaps ironically, Scott's 30th wedding anniversery falls on Nov. 2 — Election Day.

Scott's civic experiences began with her family. First came several years as a Boy Scout den mother. Then came PTA and work in the Methodist Church.

But as her children grew up, Scott's efforts evolved into a deep commitment to the Republican Party — working election desks, fund-raisers and door-to-door campaigning.

"I just thought to myself that this is where you can make a difference in your country if you really want to do something," she says. "I never really planned on becoming a candidate myself."

But she insists that if elected to the House, she can retain her independence and will be able to differ from senior party members on individual issues — if Twin Falls constituents require it.

As an example, Scott says she was the only Twin Falls GOP delegate to the state convention this year who asked that a plan to support the 50 percent homeowner's property-tax initiative be discussed by the full convention, even though she personally opposes the measure.

"I am a quiet person, and I work from the background," she says. "But at the same time, I have the ability to work with people of all types — Democrat, Republican, conservative or liberal."

Talkington stresses his personal commitment to service of the public

By BRUCE HAMMOND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Calling himself a "World War II baby," Chris Talkington says he became aware at an early age what commitment to public service involves.

His father, Lee, was a Twin Falls police detective who later served as security chief for the College of Southern Idaho until retiring a couple of years ago.

"It took time and a lot of personal commitment," Talkington says simply of his father's profession.

Today, at 36, Talkington apparently hasn't shied away from making his own commitments.

After seven years on Twin Falls City Council, he now presides as mayor and is running for the Legislature. Campaigning as an independent, he faces Republican Donna Scott for a District 25 House seat.

He says his interest in politics comes from an insatiable curiosity that was cultivated by his parents and Norman Herrett, the founder of the Twin Falls museum that bears the same name.

"I guess you'd have to say that Norman Herrett was my mentor," Talkington says. "I became interested in astronomy when I was still in high school, and Mr. Herrett allowed me to give lectures at his first location (museum).

Talkington, who was born in Twin Falls, graduated from high school here in 1964. Other than participating in track during those years, he says his main activities were outside school, such as the astronomy studies promoted by Herrett.

"Mr. Herrett always encouraged my curiosity and assured me that asking questions wasn't something to be ashamed of, or that showed stupidity."

That curiosity ultimately enticed Talkington into the journalism profession and later into politics.

"I served in the Air Force for four years, and during that time, I became interested in writing short stories, and I did a little work on the base newspaper," he recalls.

From there, he worked on the college paper at Idaho State University and also for the Idaho State Journal, both in Pocatello. He holds a master's degree in public administration from ISU, is married and has one daughter.

"Then I worked as news director for KEXD radio in the Boise-Nampa area before returning to Twin Falls as a reporter and then news director at KMVT television."

From his news reporting, Talkington says he became familiar with the relationship between taxpayers and government.

"I saw where things didn't come together and problems didn't get solved," he says. "You have to know how things work before you can make changes, and I finally got to the point where I wanted to make improvements from the inside."

He first was elected to City Council in 1975, receiving the second most votes in a wide field of candidates.

But he insists that politics is only a hobby to him, and that business is his profession. Talkington is employed by a Twin Falls investment-counseling business and is no longer involved in news-gathering.

"If I had to look at politics as a profession, I'd go crazy."

Most controversial in Talkington's bid for a House seat is his status as an independent. But he insists that this fits with his previous experience and the beliefs they have generated.

Area Republicans have criticized Talkington for shunning party affiliations. They say he won't be effective in the Legislature because he won't have input in party caucuses, during which key discussions are held on issues and bills.

"I have talked to some Republican leaders from this area, past and present, and they have encouraged me to caucus with one party or the other," Talkington says. "They admit it's not necessary, but they say there is more to be gained by aligning yourself with one side or the other."

Neighbors complain, but board grants permit

By SUSAN GALLAGHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A businesswoman who wants to open a new office narrowly obtained an essential permit Tuesday night from the Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission.

Marilyn Way, who intends to open a real-estate office in an Addison Avenue dwelling targeted for restoration, encountered the opposition of several neighboring homeowners at a hearing the commission held Tuesday.

The neighbors contended that by operating a real-estate office at 752 Addison Ave., Way will draw traffic that will compound existing problems stemming from an unimproved alley behind the Addison Avenue building and the homes near it.

Residents said clouds of dust rise from the unpaved alley when vehicles travel on it in dry weather, and on rainy days, a quagmire develops because of poor drainage. Those problems, and the congestion that already exists when residents use the alley to reach their garages, will worsen if Way's business and the related traffic are allowed, the homeowners said.

They also said they're concerned that at night, when Way's business is closed, people will loiter in the parking spaces she would install.

Way replied that if the building remains in use as a rental dwelling, it will be marketable only to "less desirable" tenants, and she indicated that doesn't appear to be what the neighbors want. Way said she wants to restore the original character of the building, which is considered historically significant. She also questioned the appropriateness of several signatures on a petition signed by 16 neighbors who oppose her plans.

Not all of the residents who spoke at Tuesday's hearing opposed Way's application for a special-use permit. Gary Hall, of 129 Tenth Ave. N., said the building no longer is fit for use as a dwelling because of the area's relatively high-speed traffic.

The commissioners voted 3-2 in favor of Way's application for a permit. Casting "yes" votes were Jack Miller, Mary Turner and John R. Bonnett, who is an alternate commissioner. Bill Hollifield and Jean Cilek voted against Way's request, while Ken Roy, a Twin Falls real-estate broker, abstained. Commissioners Janice Stover and Gary Wignall were absent.

Also Tuesday, the six commissioners at the meeting unanimously approved an unopposed request for a special-use permit that will allow Lenkner, Michener and Associates to operate a speech and hearing clinic at 497 Eastland Drive.

Over hook-up fee

Cable committee rules in favor of customer

By SUSAN GALLAGHER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A man who disagrees with a Magic Valley Cablevision rate plan has won the support of a review committee consisting of three Twin Falls City Council members.

Two of the three councilmen have voted to recommend that Cablevision comply with the wishes of a Twin Falls man who complained he was being charged unfairly for a cable hook-up. Mayor Chris Talkington said this week.

The complaint of Jess Lambert, of 1530 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls, was the subject of a committee hearing Oct. 13. The hearing was the committee's first.

Lambert claimed it is unreasonable for Cablevision to charge him $10, in addition to a standard $20 connection fee, to have a cable strung from a pole to his residence. Lambert said he was informed by Cablevision that the extra $10 would be charged because a previous occupant of the Kimberly Road residence used Cablevision service illegally, causing the company to remove the exterior cable.

Cablevision's manager, Gene Rittnour, said at the hearing that the assessments in Lambert's case are consistent with the company's rate and service policy. He also said that delinquency by the previous occupants of Lambert's residence was not verified as the reason for the disconnection, although it was a possible cause.

A city staff member will send Cablevision a letter recommending that Lambert not be charged the additional $10, according to Talkington, who said the committee's opinion is not binding.

The committee, formed in June, is strictly advisory and was created to foster smooth relations between Cablevision's customers and the company, which holds a city franchise, Talkington has said.

According to findings of fact signed by the mayor, the charging of an additional $10 technically does not violate Cablevision's regulations, but it does violate their spirit. The committee recommends the cable company develop other procedures to recoup expenses related to the illegal use of its services.

Talkington said that he and Councilman Bud Cheney voted in favor of Lambert. Councilman Emery Petersen voted to support the company's position.

Hansen school board delays decision on parking-lot bid

By KATE LOPEZ
Times-News correspondent

HANSEN — A decision on a dispute over paving costs at the high-school parking lot in Hansen was delayed by the school board Monday night.

The board held a special meeting to try to find a compromise solution to a problem the School District is having with Gordon Paving of Twin Falls.

In a bid submitted on Aug. 5, Brad Hansen of Gordon Paving determined it would cost $4,181 to pave the lot. The district accepted the bid the following week, according to Superintendent Richard Smith.

But on Oct. 18, Hansen appeared at the regular meeting of the school board to say that he had made an error in measuring the project.

He said that he bid the project for a job measuring 173 feet, 8 inches by 50 feet, instead of 173 feet, 8 inches by 150 feet.

"I'm here to tell you there was a mistake," he told the board at that meeting, where both parties indicated that a compromise could solve the problem.

According to board Chairman Richard Youree, the special meeting Monday was held to determine what form of compromise, if any, would be acceptable to the board.

The board members became concerned, however, that the presentation of a compromise to the paving company might legally supercede the original bid, Smith said.

A decision will be delayed until the board receives legal advice on the bidding procedure, Smith said.

"We hope to resolve this by next week. It's been going on since the beginning of August."

Willing workers

TWIN FALLS — Man's best friend can be a businessman's best partner.

Working pets are on the job at locations throughout Twin Falls.

From a shoe-repair store to a dry-cleaner's office to — of course — a pet outlet, furry, feathered and fuzzy creatures are minding the shop for master.

Angel, a blue and gold macaw, often greets customers at the Fish Bowl, 685 Filer Ave., with a cackling "hello." The owners, Ken and Jackie Davis, had intended to sell the bird, but they discovered that they couldn't part with her.

A mere babe, Angel is just 2½ years old and could live for another 75 to 150 years.

At the South Park Shoe Repair shop, Cindy II retrieves cigars for owner Rubin Rodriguez, and sometimes enjoys a few puffs herself.

The working pet league includes at least one white-collar worker: the erudite tarantula who helps out in Lois Williams' science class at Robert Stuart Junior High School. Moreover, he stays after class each day and on weekends, resting in his glass cage.

Then, there's a new "boss" at Doss — Exclusive Cleaners, 232 Second St. E., the home of Maxine "The Hat Lady" Byrnes. Last summer, her white poodle Taco died, and Maxine "just about went crazy." With the help of a radio station, she found a new pup, dubbed Buttons. Now, she reports, Buttons is fast learning the tricks of the dry-cleaning trade.

One might think these working pets don't make the most efficient employees. Maybe so, but you sure can't beat the wages.

Undue influence charged in tax order

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

RUPERT — The State Tax Commission, already in hot water with some county officials for increasing property-tax assessments, is getting flak for not going far enough.

In a letter sent to Gov. John Evans last week, Cassia County Assessor Cal Heiner contends that "a miscarriage of even-handedness may have occurred in the way that the equalization effort has been handled between counties and the State Tax Commission."

The letter also questions whether two Minidoka County legislators, Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, and Rep. Mack Neibaur, R-Rupert, influenced the state agency's decision to back down.

"It would appear that either an immediate hearing should be held in Minidoka County, or that the complaints against the other counties be dropped at once," Heiner wrote. "If this is not cleared up, we shall take it as our cue to lower the values in Cassia County to the Minidoka County level, or make a legal challenge of the Tax Commission action."

Heiner was not one of the five county assessors in the Magic Valley who earlier this year were ordered to increase property-tax assessments. Lincoln and Minidoka county officials eventually reached agreements with the state agency. Twin Falls, Gooding and Blaine, along with Caribou, Canyon and Bonneville counties, are locked in a legal battle with the state agency.

The Idaho Supreme Court is scheduled to hear arguments on the dispute today.

Heiner's complaint stems from the Tax Commission's decision to withdraw its order requiring Minidoka officials to increase assessments by 32 percent on agricultural land and by 10 percent on rural subdivisions.

The decision followed a July meeting between Tax Commission staff, former Assessor Cecil Dickson, the two legislators and the Minidoka County commission.

The decision has left disproportionate tax rates between Minidoka and Cassia counties, Heiner says. Cassia County residents "may be subsidizing the taxpayers in Minidoka County where there are overlapping taxing districts," he says.

Heiner's letter contends that the Tax Commission buckled under the influence of Antone, the chairman of the House Revenue and Taxation Committee, and Neibaur, a member of the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee.

Both men are involved in farming operations and stood to pay more property taxes if the Tax Commission maintained its original stance, he says.

Antone owns 320 acres of Minidoka County farm land. Neibaur manages a 3,400-acre farming operation and owns about 12 acres in the county.

However, no one who attended the session has accused either lawmaker of engaging in politics. The two legislators say their involvement consisted of attending the session and providing information on farming costs and profits — factors that are considered in determining the value of farm land for taxing purposes. Neibaur acknowledges that he arranged the meeting, but he reportedly did so at the Tax Commission's request.

"Certainly, the inference by Mr. Heiner that it was political influence was out of line," Dickson says. "He wasn't at the meeting, and I'm sure his knowledge of what took place at that meeting is only hearsay."

Neibaur also questions whether politics motivated Heiner's letter.

"This thing happened a long time ago. Why this thing comes out now, just a week before the election, is something I wonder about," he says.

However, the two Tax Commission representatives who attended the meeting disagree about whether the mere presence of the legislators influenced the decision.

On one hand, regional supervisor Scott Erwin questions why Minidoka County officials were not subjected to a formal hearing, as were officials from Gooding and Blaine counties.

Erwin, who prepared the initial research that led to the increase order, says he felt "somewhat intimidated" by the situation.

"The assessor there had petitioned their help in the situation. I think it has something to do with it. From my own standpoint, I really felt like I was in no position to disagree with them in any way," Erwin says. "I think the mistake is this: I think the state should have had a hearing in Minidoka County, as they did in other counties."

But Earl Lusk, the assistant director of the Tax Commission's property-tax bureau, contends the decision was based on factual information.

The failure to hold a hearing was "probably neglect on our part. However, it probably didn't mean that much," Lusk says. "This was very valid information. We were in no position not to recognize the information."

Lusk agrees with Heiner on one point, however.

"I think a real solution to this is very simple; that all the parties involved have another meeting on nuetral ground," Lusk says. "I've offered openly to the commissioners to be at the meeting. I think we can verify everything we've done very easily."

Task force told local control of CSI is best

By GLEN WARCHOL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A task force on higher education in Idaho has been told that there should be no tampering with the local control of the College of Southern Idaho.

The Idaho Task Force on Higher Education held a public meeting Tuesday night at O'Leary Junior High School in Twin Falls to solicit comments from area residents. The input will be used to help recommend a future course for higher education in Idaho.

A task-force panel, including Sen. Laird Noh, R-Twin Falls, L.N. Purdy of Picabo and John Forbes of Jerome, was told by citizens that CSI's effectiveness as a community college was in great part due to its being controlled by a local board of trustees.

The college receives 40 percent of its funding from the state. It has been suggested that the state's community colleges be integrated into the state system and governed by the state Board of Education.

"I feel that the College of Southern Idaho would not be what it is today if it were governed by a state agency," said LeRoy Craig, the chairman of the CSI board of trustees. "It's very important that a community college be responsive to the needs of the community."

"I feel very strongly that a comprehensive community college is of the people, by the people and for the people, and it should stay that way," said Bob Blastock, another CSI trustee. "If it ain't broke, don't fix it!"

The task force, established by the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry, is preparing a study intended to ensure that high-quality education is offered in Idaho.

Bill Koch, speaking for the K&T Steel Corp. of Twin Falls, told the panel that CSI worked with his company to fill a gap in qualified workers.

Ed Benoit, a former chairman of the state Board of Education, told the task-force panel that CSI should not be added to the Board of Education's heavy workload.

"It (the board) does not have the time to concentrate on a local community college," he said. "Control should not be transferred to the state. It (local control of CSI) has worked; let's not interrupt it."

Buhl school board draws the line on who can and can't ride

By KAREN MAIN
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Approximately 12 students, who reside just inside the perimeter formed by Fruitland, Sawtooth, Burley and Clear Lakes avenues in Buhl, will be advised that they can no longer ride school buses.

The decision to exclude certain students from bus service resulted from complaints received by the Buhl School District that some students were riding school buses "illegally." The school board agreed to the ban during action at its regular meeting Monday night.

Under a regulation created by the state Department of Education, which funds school transportation, students living less than one-and-a-half miles from school cannot ride school buses.

An exception to the rule is allowed for "safety busing," in which the state grants additional money for the transportation of students who live near streets that are hazardous to cross or walk beside.

In Buhl's case, the streets of Fruitland, Sawtooth, Burley and Clear Lakes have been designated as dangerous, thus allowing students living adjacent to those streets to be eligible for safety busing.

But allowing some students who live immediately inside the perimeter to ride buses while prohibiting others who live nearby drew criticism from some parents.

Faced with complaints that the dividing lines were inequitable and that some students living near the boundaries were riding illegally, the board decided to simplify the boundary rules.

The four streets will remain boundaries for safety-busing purposes, but rather than allowing students who live adjacent to the streets to ride the buses, only students living "outside" the streets may ride.

Letters will be sent to approximately 12 families who live within the boundaries notifying them of the change.

"We'll give them a couple days warning," Superintendent Bob Pratt said.

The board also voted to apply for another year's grant for safety busing.

In other business:

• Junior-high Principal Bob Sept reported that more than $10,000 had been raised through magazine subscription sales by middle-school students.

• Board members postponed a decision on how to alleviate traffic congestion at the elementary school.

Principal Lawrence LaRue said the circle driveway in front of the school is packed when parents of kindergarten students pick their children up after the morning class.

Hospital begins to pay the piper for bonds issued for construction

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — With its massive construction program heading toward completion, Magic Valley Regional Medical Center's budget has to stretch to start paying the piper.

The "piper" in this case is the interest and principal on the $26.7 million in bonds issued to fund the project.

But with a projected $3 million in revenues generated from the hospital's operations, controller Jeff Taylor predicts that MVRMC will be able to pay off its annual debt service, account for depreciation, and have funds left for new equipment and unforeseen circumstances.

The budget for fiscal year 1983, which ends next Sept. 30, was approved Monday by the hospital's board of trustees. The "bottom line," the excess of revenues over expenses, is projected to be $1.4 million.

Net patient revenues are expected to increase by about 17 percent to $19.811 million. About 12 percent of those revenues stem from out-patient charges; the rest is from in-patients. Net revenues from operations come to $19.847 million.

The provision for bad debts will increase by 21.7 percent to $1.2 million.

Total operating costs will come to an estimated $16.434 million, about a 12.3 percent increase over fiscal 1983.

About 56 percent of the hospital's costs stem from salaries and benefits, about 20 percent from supplies and the rest from medical specialist fees, contract services and other areas.

About $1.648 million in interest on the bonds will be paid off in 1983, an increase of 8.9 percent over the payments made in fiscal 1982. A total of $1.220 million has been set aside to account for depreciation and amortization.

Non-operating revenues will total an estimated $849,000 in fiscal 1983, a decrease of about 63.5 percent from the unaudited figures for fiscal 1982.

Most non-operating revenues come from interest generated by investments made with bond funds. That figure will decrease "because, of course, we're spending the (bond) money" for construction, Taylor said.

The 1983 budget is based on several "assumptions," including an anticipated 10 percent room-rate increase in August of 1983.

Taylor sees no across-the-board rate increases in ancillary services, however, such as laboratory work or X-rays. Rather, he said, the hospital will examine each department's financial record and set new charges, if needed, accordingly.

"Our goal is to provide quality service at the lowest possible rate," Taylor said.

The budget also assumes a 7.5 percent increase in patient days, because of the development of the "regional-medical-center" concept and completion of the construction project in early to mid-summer 1982.

The new CAT scanner, a sophisticated X-ray device, is expected to be installed early in 1983 and also generate additional revenue.

Salary increases have not yet been determined, but they will be set in a month's time, Taylor said. About 6 percent of the amount set aside for salaries and benefits in 1983 has been targeted for raises, according to the hospital's 1982-83 management plan. Taylor emphasized the actual increase percentage for individual salaries has yet to be set, however.

A limit of $250,000 has been set for capital expenditures, such as new medical equipment. New equipment acquisitions planned for 1983 include a laboratory analyzer, costing about $40,000 to $45,000, and a gas sterilizer for surgical instruments, which costs about $44,000, according to Taylor.

A comparison of the 1983 budget and the actual, although unaudited, figures for 1982, shows the hospital came very close to its projections in most areas.

For example, patient revenues in 1982 were projected at $16.725 million. The unaudited 1982 figures show patient revenues at $16.940 million. Operating costs were projected at $14.365 million. The unaudited figures show costs of $14.630 million 1982.

Because of additional money generated by investments, "profits" in 1982 came to about $2.637 million, while projections called for $1.573 million in excess revenues.

Shoshone hosts annual hobby fair

By JANENE BUCKWAY
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE — The 1982 holiday season will get under way today in Lincoln County, with the annual Holiday Hobby Fair.

The fair, under the direction of Kate Spessard, a Cooperative Extension Service home economist, will be held in the Shoshone Mormon Church from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

A pot-luck salad-bar luncheon will be served from noon to 1 p.m., and child care will be available throughout the day.

Spessard says that the event is a crafts-type fair, giving area residents a chance to display and demonstrate their favorite crafts or holidays gifts and decorating ideas.

Some craft items will be offered for sale.

Professional demonstrations, each one hour long, also will be featured.

Bill Mallory, a baker from the Sun Valley bakery in Hailey, will demonstrate "Holiday Bread Ideas."

Spessard says that Mallory has some 35 years experience as a baker, including owning his own shop.

He will discuss how to make sweet rolls, wheat bread, etc., from a basic dough. He also will demonstrate ways to "jazz up" holiday breads.

A special feature will be in stritzel, a baked basket, completely edible, for serving bread and rolls.

Recipes, hints and baking tips will be available.

Admission will be $1, plus a salad for the pot-luck lunch. Those eating are to bring their own table service.

Child care will cost $1 per hour, plus a sack lunch for the child.

A thought for today

A thought for the day: American novelist Willa Cather said, "The history of every country begins in the heart of a man or woman."

Motel

property make it through winter, he says.

Although there are a total of 202 rooms in the three-building complex, only 109 are usable at present, Kiblinger says. The remainder are "out of commission" because of plumbing and heating problems.

Repair work will be concentrated on the usable rooms. The coffee shop also will be refurbished, Kiblinger says. Presently, the 1,500-seat convention center and conference center also are in use. The motel dining room is not. It may be repaired at a later date, he says.

"We hope to have an acceptable product to offer and sell — not the end or ultimate product by any means — by next summer," Kiblinger says.

One of the advantages of management by the corporation is being able to use its marketing and sales division to promote new business for the Ponderosa, Kiblinger says. Within two to three months, the corporation staff should have a marketing plan ready for the motel, he says.

"Group business will have to be a major part of the Ponderosa," that is, convention and conference business on the local, regional and national levels, Kiblinger says.

The community also will have to show its support, even if "it's just to come in and have lunch," the manager says.

Historically, the Ponderosa has been a successful operation and important to the community, area and state, Kiblinger says.

Kiblinger noted that the Otter Corp. has been successful with such "salvage" operations.

"I think the whole thing is a positive situation. No way could the Ponderosa have continued for another year. The business is here to support it, but it's not going to walk to our doorstep. We're going to have to be very aggressive," Kiblinger says."

Talkington

Talkington originally said that if the two parties refused to let him caucus back and forth between the two groups, according to his stand on individual issues, he would caucus by himself.

"I am now considering what they've told me, but I hate to align myself on one side because I could lose flexibility in representing my constituents," he says.

"Being independent is something I think most Idahoans do," he says. "A majority of people in our state split ballots. They don't vote straight-party tickets.

"I think this shows a failure on the part of both parties to satisfy the needs of people. And that's why I think an independent candidate can be elected and can be effective in the Legislature."

A brief summary of Talkington's legislative goals includes:

• Allowing local governments — cities, counties, highway districts — to have more autonomy over their activities and in deciding how to attract new businesses to their area.

• Allowing county or city residents to approve local-option taxes, while shifting state government's reliance on property taxes to more broad-base taxes, such as sales taxes and user taxes.

• Establishing a state export commission to help businessmen and farmers contact foreign markets.

• Encouraging diverse use of small hydroelectric power plants to help meet the state's future energy demand.

Scott

Scott chaired the 1982 state convention for the Idaho Federation of Republican Women and is past president of the Twin Falls chapter.

A summary of her legislative goals include:

• Insisting that Idaho educators find new ways to improve the quality of high-school graduates, before the Legislature agrees to increase public school funding. She opposes "simply budgeting more money to enlarge a troubled system."

• Encouraging more programs like the World Trade Association in Twin Falls to help Idahoans market goods abroad.

• Pursuing a package of business incentives designed to bolster the economy and produce new jobs.

• Establishing stiffer penalties for convicted drunken drivers.

Shootout victims not hit in back, autopsy indicates

TUCSON, Ariz. (UPI) — Autopsies of two members of an all-black church apparently refuted charges by angry church attorneys the men had been shot in the back in a gun battle with sheriff's deputies in Miracle Valley.

Department of Public Safety Sgt. Allan Schmidt said Tuesday there were wounds in the backs of William Thomas Jr., 33, and his father-in-law, Arguster Tate, 52, but they went in a "side-to-side" direction.

"No shots were fired directly into their backs," Schmidt said.

Stanley Hill and G. Severe Cole, Chicago attorneys for the Christ Miracle Healing Center and Church, charged Monday Thomas and Tate were shot in the back in "an assassination" by Cochise County sheriff's deputies Saturday.

Schmidt said three of the seven shots that hit Thomas and Tate entered the men in their backs, but he said the bullets were traveling "in a side-to-side fashion."

Cochise County deputies were trying to serve traffic warrants on three church members when gunfire broke out in the small community of Miracle Valley, culminating a long-standing feud between townspeople and the transplanted Chicago church.

Non-church witnesses said the deputies were attacked by church members bearing clubs, bats and other objects before the gunfire broke out. Church members said the deputies began firing without cause.

Schmidt said autopsies conducted in Tucson by medical examiners Richard C. Froede and James M. Byers showed Thomas was hit by four shots, including two non-fatal shots in the hand and wrist, while Tate was struck three times.

Schmidt said it could not be conclusively determined from which direction each shot came from because the men may have turned after being initially shot.

"Bodies move and there is no bearing on what direction the shots came from until we include it in our total investigation," the DPS officer said.

Schmidt said the final investigation of the incident may not be completed for several months.

Thomas was the son of the leader of the church, Rev. Frances Thomas. Mrs. Thomas led the church to Miracle Valley from Chicago in the summer of 1979. Church members have been involved in many confrontations with other residents and local authorities.

Parody plucks prize

Big winner in the seventh annual Milk Carton Boat races at Redwood City, Calif., was this parody of the sponsoring Marine World/Africa USA. It featured a jumping dolphin and a Bengal tiger, and was built by the Martin family of Alameda. They used over 900 milk cartons sealed in hot wax in the four-week project, but won a $450 first prize.

Indians' spokesman flays Watt water plan

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Interior Secretary James Watt's plans to give states supremacy over water rights violates the U.S. Constitution and is a plot to confiscate Indian water rights, a representative of 26 tribes said.

Phyllis Young, spokesman for the Missouri River Basin Tribes Water Rights Coalition, protested Watt's Tuesday announcement, saying it "reflects the frontier mentality of the present administration." She maintained states have no rights over Indian water.

In speaking to the National Water Resource Association convention in Salt Lake City, Watt said interstate water compacts will have to be forged between the states where there are competing water interests and the states will have to negotiate with Indian tribes within their borders.

"The policy of this conference reinforces the carefully laid plans of the Department of Interior to undermine and subvert federal law through 'under the table dealings' with Indian tribes under the guise of negotiation," she said.

"Our past history of negotiation with the federal government has only resulted in the Indian tribes suffering massive land and resources ripoff," said Mrs. Young, who represents tribes from Montana, the Dakotas and Nebraska.

"Some of the Indian tribes in the West have already undergone that negotiation, and they have nothing to show for it," she said.

She said the U.S. Constitution specifically gives the national government water rights as a trust, and "the Supreme Court's Winters Doctrine recognizes the prior, paramount and superior Indian reserved water rights," she said.

As part of the negotiation process, tribes would be forced to drop all law suits involving water rights, she said, in order to help Watt meet a timetable he has developed for completion of various water projects. She rejected that suggestion.

Fliers' wives seeking to use report at trial

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Three wives of Thunderbirds stunt pilots want to use a 700-page Air Force report blaming a jammed tail stabilizer for the deaths of their flier-husbands in an upcoming federal trial.

Attorney Gary Logan, representing three of the four wives of the pilots killed in the Jan. 18 "follow-the-leader" crash at nearby Indian Springs, asked U.S. Magistrate Philip Pro to admit the report as evidence in the case against Northrup Inc., builders of the T-38s used by the Air Force team.

Pro said he would take the matter under advisement and issue a written ruling by today.

"Our experts, based upon this report, are going to testify that the lead aircraft piloted by Maj. (Norman) Lowry was defective and it was this design defect that caused the crash," Logan told Pro.

Dismissal appeal set in computer theft case

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — U.S. Attorney Joseph Russoniello is appealing a federal judge's dismissal of charges against three persons indicted for conspiring to steal IBM computer secrets and sell them to Japanese competitors.

Russoniello said prosecutors planned to file their notice of appeal Wednesday in U.S. District Court. They will then have 30 days to file papers in support of the appeal.

U.S. District Court Judge Robert P. Aguilar dismissed charges last month against Raymond Cadet, Barry Saffale and Tabassom Ayazi.

Aquilar dismissed the case because federal prosecutors refused to turn over to defense attorneys reams of government records, including the personnel files of undercover FBI agents.

If the appeal is successful the case would be sent back to the district court for trial.

Cadet and Saffale, former engineers at National Advanced Systems of Mountainview, and Miss Ayazi, an associate of Saffale's, were charged with receiving allegedly stolen IBM trade secrets.

Two Japanese electronics firms, Hitachi Ltd. and Mitsubishi Electric Corp., and 18 other individuals were also charged with conspiring to send stolen IBM trade secrets to Japan.

Trials for the two companies and the remaining 18 defendants are still pending in federal court.

The case was broken last spring in an undercover FBI "sting" operation.

Gypsies pay final tribute to leader

SPOKANE (UPI)— The Spokane Gypsy community paid final tribute to its king Tuesday following a six-day wake.

Miller Marks died last Thursday of congestive heart failure. He was 62.

Funeral services were held at the Greek Orthodox church with several hundred mourners. As a final tribute, coins and wine were poured on his coffin as it was lowered into the ground.

Bulgarian sailors seek refuge in U.S.

SALEM, Ore. (UPI) — Two Bulgarian sailors are staying at the Oregon home of a friend while they await word on whether they will be allowed to remain in the United States.

The two sailors, Radi Nikolov, 29, and Bojidar Penchev, 44, jumped their fishing ships in Astoria last week and asked for political asylum.

They are staying at the home of Christ Petrof of Salem, a Bulgarian defector who has been in this country for 2½ years.

Hysteria likened to medieval madness

By T.W. McGARRY
United Press International

LOS ANGELES — The illness that convulsed some 200 people at a high school football game appears to have been an outbreak of mass hysteria similar to the the terror that sent thousands of maddened survivors of plagues dancing wildly across Europe in the Middle Ages, some psychiatrists say.

News reports of the Tylenol and similar poisonings have raised the "fear threshold" to the level where some people — particularly the immature or unsophisticated — expect to be poisoned and react accordingly, they said.

A random survey of psychiatrists turned up unanimous agreement that the incident at the game appeared to be a classic case of mass hysteria, most probably brought on by worry over the Tylenol poisonings.

"This has been known throughout history and crops up every so often," said Dr. John Nemiah, chief psychiatrist at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston and professor at Harvard Medical School. "The Tylenol reports set the stage for this."

There have been several notable incidents of mass hysteria throughout history, he noted. "The Salem witch hunt seems to have been a case of mass hysteria . . . and remember the panic after the broadcast of H.G. Wells 'War of the Worlds.' That was a mass phenomena too."

Some 200 people, mostly teenagers, who attended a high school football game in Monterey Park last Friday night were treated at local hospitals for symptoms of "poisoning." Scores of them passed out, vomited or were brought in by ambulance.

They thought soft drinks from a refreshment stand had been poisoned but officials have been unable to find any poison.

"A few people got sick and a whole lot of people got hysterical," said Dr. Shirley Fannin, associate director for communicable disease control. She blamed the incident on "universal paranoia coming from the Tylenol business . . . It's a phenomenon that has been observed before."

"Mass hysteria really does exist and it was most prominent during the Middle Ages, when there were waves of mass hysteria in Europe," said Dr. Sherwyn Woods, professor of psychiatry at the University of Southern California.

"The human body is enormously responsive to emotions," he said, and those in the grip of such a mass hysteria, "really feel the pain. The illness is real to them. They really are vomiting because they have to."

"So-called epidemics of this sort happen a lot," said Dr. Edward Stainbrook, professor emeritus of psychiatry at USC and former chief pschiatrist at County-USC hospital. "The dancing manias of the middle ages were somewhat similar.

"This is similar to the dancing madness, which followed the bubonic plague in Europe," said Dr. Robert Pasnau, director of adult psychiatry at the UCLA Neuropsychiatric Institute.

From the 12th to the 17th centuries, Europeans maddened by plagues — such as the infamous black death that killed more than a third of the population of the continent in the 14th century — went on mad dancing binges. In Italy it was the tarantella, in other places the dance of death or St. Vitus dance, which mimicked the contortions and grimaces of sufferers of the chorea disease.

Crowds sometimes danced wildly from village to village, growing to hordes of thousands. "In every town they reached, they'd pick up more hysterics," said Dr. Charles Sturdevant, medical director of Capistrano-by-the-Sea Psychiatric Hospital at Dana Point, Calif.

Off-duty deputy breaks up attempt to hijack jetliner

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A man armed with a knife attempted to hijack a TWA passenger plane early Wednesday, but an off-duty sheriff's deputy aboard the jetliner overpowered the suspect and threw him onto the runway.

Police said William Hoffman, 25, forced his way aboard TWA Flight 72 to St. Louis as the L1011 was about to take off at 11:40 p.m. MDT from Los Angeles International Airport with 97 passengers aboard.

Lt. John Zorn said Hoffman allegedly contacted the pilot, C. R. Baker, through the aircraft's intercom and attempted to hijack the jet to an unknown location.

Baker in turn managed to notify Dennis Robinson, an off-duty deputy he knew was aboard the plane, and Robinson confronted the suspect.

After a fight broke out between Hoffman and Robinson, crew members opened an emergency door. Hoffman pushed the suspect out the door and onto the runway 30 feet below, Zorn said.

Police officers who had surrounded the plane arrested Hoffman, who was taken to Centinela Hospital Medical Center for treatment of injuries sustained in the fall.

Hoffman was booked for attempted hijacking, Zorn said, adding that the FBI had taken charge of the case.

It was not known how Hoffman smuggled a knife through metal detecting devices at the airport or why he attempted to hijack the plane, Zorn said.

Police arrest 15, impound big quantity of pot, heroin

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Fifteen people were arrested by law enforcement officers who seized 500 pounds of marijuana and 6 pounds of high-grade brown heroin with a street value of $5 million.

One of those arrested, a juvenile, was to be released Wednesday, officers said, while the other 14 were expected to be arraigned on federal felony charges of conspiracy and possession with intent to distribute.

The raids were announced by Ted Hunter of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, who said they culminated a two-year investigation and disrupted "the most influential brown heroin trafficking group known to authorities in Southern California."

Other arrests are pending.

Hunter said heroin purchased by undercover agents during the investigation had an average purity content of 60 to 80 percent.

Female officer sues to block Navy discharge proceeding

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — A female Navy officer being thrown out of the military for lesbianism has filed suit to block her discharge, saying the charges were based on a five-minute homosexual liaison before she joined the Navy.

Attorney Michael Murray filed suit in federal court Tuesday to block the discharge of Ensign Cynthia M. Patrick, who has been ordered discharged on the basis of a five-minute sexual encounter with a college friend eight years ago.

Patrick, a computer systems officer with the Naval Investigative Service, was to have been discharged Sunday.

The Navy voluntarily agreed to postpone discharge proceedings until after a Nov. 22 hearing on the preliminary injunction request placed before U.S. District Judge J. Lawrence Irving.

Her discharge had been ordered by the former commander of the San Diego Naval Base despite recommendation by a review board that she be retained in the service.

Vandals visit BSU for showdown

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

BOISE — Idaho Coach Denny Erickson is certain of two things: (a) his Vandals are in the thick of the Big Sky Conference race and (b) probably they can't afford a loss in their last five league games.

A major test to that appraisal arises at 7 p.m. Saturday (KTLC Radio, 1270) when the Vandals play Boise State's Broncos at Bronco Stadium — where Idaho hasn't won since 1976.

"There's no doubt that this is the biggest game of the season so far for us — just as last week's game against Montana State was the biggest for us up to then," Erickson said.

His Vandals, with their and the conference's collective back to the wall, came up with three quarters of football to end Montana State's conference unbeaten boast. Had the Vandals not convincingly erased an early 17-7 deficit to win rather handily, the race for all practical purposes would have been over. It would have left Montana State at 5-0 with two to play and no one in the conference with less than two losses.

With a smile, Erickson noted that Big Sky Conference Commissioner Ron Stephenson congratulated him on the upset victory because it definitly assured a few more seats being used for another week or two.

Another thing, although national statistics haven't been released yet,this week, Idaho's Saturday night effort should have hurt its No. 1 offensive team ranking in Division I-AA.

"I still have to feel that Montana State has the inside track. It has Montana at Missoula and Northern Arizona at home — and home's the place to be," he said, refering to the statistic that in the Big Sky, the home team has won 14 of 16 games this fall.

"That's part of the problem we face at Boise this Saturday plus the fact Idaho hasn't beaten Boise State in the last five times. (Coach Ed) Troxel beat them in 1976, the first year (BSU Coach Jim) Criner was there and that's the only time we've beaten him (Criner)."

But as Erickson looks down the road, he notes "three of our next four games are on the road."

The problem at hand is the Broncos, described by Erickson as "a good team with great personnel."

The major factor, he feels, is BSU's defense.

"I think that is the strength of the team. They have an excellent secondary, probably the best we've played against with good speed and it covers one-on-one and things like that. They have players like (linebacker) John Raidy, inside backer Karl Keever and a fine safety in Larry Alder. Boise State has played well defensively all year. No one has moved consistently against them."

Also giving Erickson pause was the five-touchdown showing BSU made against Weber State last week, ending an sporadic and often futile offensive display.

"In that regard their offensive line is a lot like ours," Erickson said. "They were young and learning the system and the whole line basically was rebuilt. They're playing better now than they have all year and, like us, that means they (the Broncos) are getting better offensively."

Erickson pointed a further similarity to head up the fact perhaps both offensive lines are on a developmental collision course. "They had their best game last week against Weber and we had a great game, too, consid-

Nancy McGinnis carries most of the Bruins' hopes in the Class A state cross country finals

Friday's final tests

Class A: Bruin girls try to win again; Minico's Lara seeks individual crown

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

BOISE — Twin Falls' girls have a cross country reputation to uphold and Coach Duane Stands isn't totally unsure they can't do it.

The Bruins girls, headed by senior Nancy McGinnis, will be shooting for a second straight Class A state title at Shadow Valley Golf Course at 1:30 p.m. Friday. In fact, they'll be seeking their eighth title in nine years.

But they aren't favored. Pocatello, led by Carol Bradley, and Capital loom as the teams to beat with Idaho Falls and Meridian as the east-west darkhorses. Twin Falls has beaten all but Capital on that list at some time during the season.

"It looks pretty good for them," Stands said. "Last week (in district) our first five ran within 30 seconds from first to fifth and that is as close as we've run to each other all year. On occasion different individuals have run as close as 20 seconds to Nancy. So if we can get a grouping like that, we may be able to surprise a few people."

The emergence of Meridian as a possibility came only last week when Capital just nipped the Warriors by one point in district.

"We ran against Meridian in the Boise City meet and they weren't a factor," Stands said. "But they must have done something to get that close to Capital."

"But Pocatello still has to be the favorite," he said.

In the boys division it seems merely a question of whether Minico's Albert Lara will challenge for the individual title and if Bruins Steve Summers and Chris Williams can stay in the top 10.

Neither Twin Falls nor Minico has the depth to challenge Highland and Borah for the team crown. But the third spot is up for grabs among several schools.

Going into the boys finals, it appears that the Borah brother duo of Bob and Don Nielsen could go one-two and haul the Lions in on their coattails. That largely is based on the finish at the Twin Falls Classic, which included most of Southern Idaho Class A teams.

Highland has a strong individual in Greg Kelly who, along with the Nielsens, defeated Lara in the Twin Falls meet. However, Lara proved himself capable of winning it last spring when he ran off with the state two-mile in track.

"He has been inconsistent this year but he's such a talented kid that you have to feel he could win it," Stands said. "Albert probably is always in good enough shape to do it so maybe it's just a mental thing right now."

Class B: Tigers look for 10th straight; Wolverines must contend with Weiser

By CHRIS HAFT
Times-News writer

BOISE — Ghosts (that is, alumni) of championship teams past are haunting the Jerome Tigers' boys cross country team.

The Tigers, who seek their 10th consecutive Class B state title Friday at the Shadow Valley Golf Course, have been reminded of their "obligation" to win by former runners.

Many of these reminders, Coach Tim Dunne said, have been in letter form. "It puts some extra pressure on them,–maybe," he admitted. "They don't want to be the team that ends the streak."

But Dunne stressed that the current Jerome team also wants to satisfy itself, not simply maintain a tradition.

"They're thinking about this year, too," Dunne said. "They would like to consider themselves successful, not just the program."

Wood River Coach Bob Shay, for one, feels the Tigers will win handily.

"It looks like Jerome is going to wrap it up," Shay predicted. "I don't see anybody touching them."

Should the Tigers triumph untouched, they'll have to credit their newly attained health. Greg Bartholomew (hip pointer), Bryan Bolich (sprained right ankle) and Kurt Foote (groin pull) — top runners all — have endured times this season when they've been less than hale and hearty. Now, however, the Tigers have recovered from their ailments.

"It's really refreshing for us to have everybody healthy finally," Dunne said. "We're probably healthier now than we have been all season."

The Tigers' improved health considerably lessens the difference between their top four runners — Foote, Barrett Craig, Lance Glnes and Bartholomew. Any one of them, Dunne insists, could win the individual title.

Last Wednesday's Fourth District finals demonstrated how competitive

Wildcats are winless in conference

ISU, striving to stay in Big Sky race, faces Weber State

By CHRIS HAFT
Times-News writer

OGDEN, Utah — The Idaho State Bengals, still alive in the chase for the Big Sky Conference title, try sustain their dim hopes Saturday when they visit Weber State at 7 p.m. (KART Radio, 1400).

Though they stand just 1-2 in the conference and 3-4 overall, the Bengals can still come out on top. However, the following circumstances must occur:

• ISU has to win its final four games, all league contests, and finish 5-2 in the conference.

• Either Montana or Weber State must defeat the league-leading Montana State Bobcats, who would then also finish 5-2.

• A team that has defeated Montana State must tie for the title with MSU and ISU, because if the Bobcats and Bengals deadlock, MSU earns the championship thanks to its 30-27 overtime victory against ISU.

ISU Coach Dave Kragthorpe prefers not to dwell excessively on these possibilities, concentrating instead on the matter at hand — that is, Weber State. The last-place Wildcats are winless in the Big Sky at 0-3, and own a mere 2-5 overall mark. Nevertheless, Weber State commands Kragthorpe's respect.

"They're as about as good a team as we'll play," he said Wednesday.

The Wildcats have endured periods of anguish similar to those ISU has encountered. Like the Bengals, Weber State lost to MSU by just three points, 23-20. Additionally, the Wildcats nearly defeated Idaho, failing just 35-34.

ISU and Weber State will be hard-pressed to equal the dramatics they provided fans last year, when they climaxed the season by playing a three-overtime, 33-30 thriller finally won by the Bengals, enabling them to clinch the Big Sky title.

But Kragthorpe believes that a repeat performance is possible.

"Obviously the stakes aren't quite as high, but we've still got the same kind of teams and offensive philosophy," he said.

The Wildcats still have the same quarterback, Tim Bernal, that they did a year ago. Bernal is Weber State's major offensive weapon, having thrown for 1,411 yards while completing 131 of 250 passes. Only five of his passes, though, have gone for touchdowns.

Defensively, Weber State possesses four players who particularly impress Kragthorpe: nose guard John Kavanaugh, linebacker Joe DiPoalo and backs Elbert Gray and Vic Fletcher. But on the whole, the Wildcats have given up 20 points or more in every game but one.

ISU quarterback Paul Peterson would doubtlessly welcome such a porous unit. Peterson won the Big Sky Offensive Player of the Week award for his passing in last week's 28-14 victory over Montana, and Kragthorpe feels the transfer from San Diego CC is still improving.

"The thing that pleased me most was that he was throwing to his 'short' receivers, taking what was there, which is our type of game," Kragthorpe said.

A changed NBA opens new season Friday

By PAUL NEEDELL
New York Daily News

Changes. That's the word that best describes the National Basketball Association's 37th season, a season that gets under way Friday when 22 of the league's 23 teams start playing for real.

Changes. Moses Malone has moved his title as the league's most dominant player from Houston to Philadelphia for a cool $13 million. Caldwell Jones, a mainstay of the 76ers' near-championship teams, was part of the deal that allowed Malone to change his tax status. Artis Gilmore, via Chicago, has become the new hope in San Antonio to push the Spurs over the top.

For fans of smaller folks, Phil Ford and Ray Williams traded places in Kansas City and New Jersey, respectively, and Ray's ex-Knick running mate, Michael Ray Richardson, also went West — to Golden State. And Quinn Buckner took his linebacker physique from Milwaukee to Boston as compensation for the unretired Dave Cowens.

Changes. And that's just a few of them. The only thing that will not change in this 1982-83 season is the crowning of the league champion. The Los Angeles Lakers will become the first team since the 1968-69 Celtics to repeat as champs, and if that's not going out on enough of a limb for you, we apologize. But that's the way it's gonna be.

Here's how things stack up around the NBA this year, in expected order of finish:

EASTERN CONFERENCE
Atlantic Division

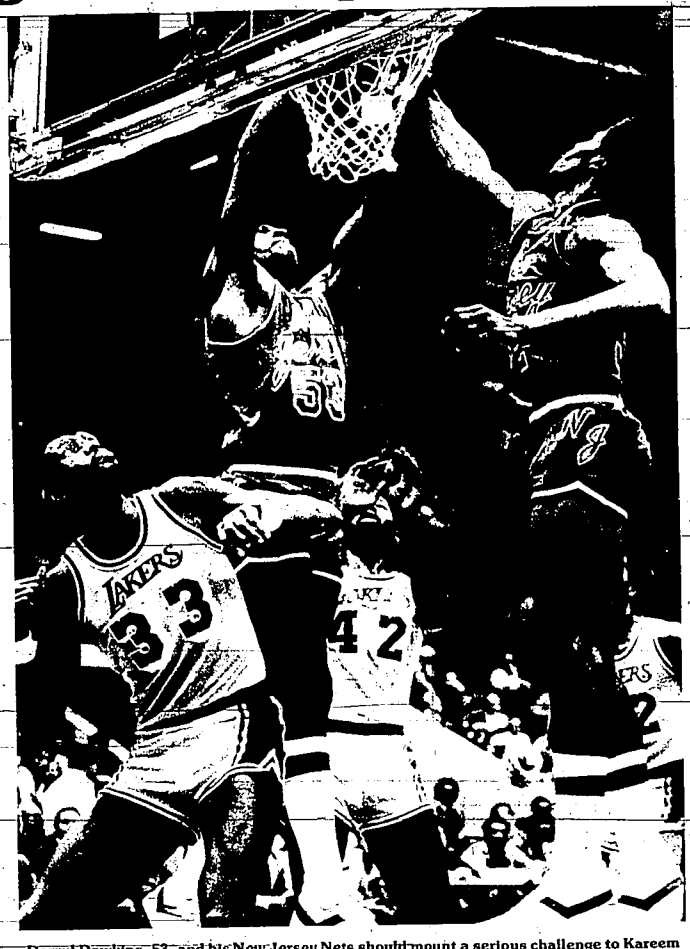
BOSTON — Despite Philly's addition of Malone, Celtics are still class of division. They show that you can take quickness out of a fast-break and still make it work. As long as Larry Bird, Robert Parish, Cedric Maxwell and Tiny Archibald are around, Bill Fitch has nothing to worry about. Kevin McHale is league's best non-starting forward and addition of Buckner could prove invaluable. Danny Ainge (shooting better than 50 percent in pre-season) may be ready to fill big-guard void. A beautiful team to watch.

PHILADELPHIA — There's no telling how much Malone could mean to this club. Sixers were out-rebounded by opponents last year, but have grabbed five more a game than opposition so far in pre-season — and Moses is playing just 25 minutes. Julius Erving is still a marvel who can take control in any game; surprise is that his partner at forward figures to be draftee Marc Iavaroni, who has played last three years in Italy. Coach Billy Cunningham likes to bring Bobby Jones off bench. Backcourt is set with Maurice Cheeks and Andrew Toney.

NEW JERSEY — Darryl Dawkins, a scapegoat from Philadelphia, is now doing his chocolate thunder dunking in New Jersey. Dawkins wanted to slip in easily. "I'm sick of hearing about potential," Dawkins said. "'Great Expectations' is only a novel." Last year's Rookie of the Year, 6-foot-8 Buck Williams, is looking foward to playing alongside Dawkins. If guard Otis Birdsong's knee doesn't come around, talented third-year pro Darwin Cook will start. Can the Nets go to the playoffs again? "I think we're improved," says Coach Larry Brown, who went 44-38 his first year with the Nets but claims he did very little coaching in a Ray Williams-dominated offense.



Darryl Dawkins, 53, and his New Jersey Nets should mount a serious challenge to Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, 33, and his Los Angeles Lakers for the NBA title during the 1982-83 season

NEW YORK — Maurice Lucas, he of the mean sneer and meaner elbows, has gone to Phoenix for Len "Truck" Robinson, giving Knicks four new veteran forwards — free agents Bernard King (Golden State), Louis Orr (Indiana) and Ernie Grunfeld (Kansas City) being the others. Right after Mike Newlin was cut by the Knicks, someone mentioned new Coach Huble Brown. "Huble's really a good guy, definitely the right choice for New York," said Newlin, disregarding the fact that Brown had just sent him into basketball limbo, perhaps for eternity. It'll be impossible for the Knicks to finish ahead of the Celtics or 76ers in the Atlantic Division and very tough for them to beat out the Nets. Fourth-place looks about right.

WASHINGTON — Bullets have plenty of bulk in forward line but take forever getting up and down floor. Spencer Haywood and Greg Ballard take care of wings, while physical Ricky Mahorn patrols middle. With Kevin Grevey injured, Frank Johnson and second-rounder Bryan Warrick (St. Joseph's) have been starting backcourt in pre-season. Jeff Ruland showed he can mix it up with big boys last season.

Central Division

MILWAUKEE — Marques Johnson has been playing with fire in his eyes since first day of camp, which means he is ready to reclaim his status as league's top small forward. Cowens has shown he's physically fit — either he or Mickey Johnson will start at big forward. Thirty-four-year-old Bob Lanier takes his 80-year-old knees onto court for one more shot at title, and No. 1 pick Paul Pressey takes over Buckner's spot in backcourt. Sidney Moncrief, who some consider NBA's best, has picked up some of Buckner's ball-handling responsibilities.

ATLANTA — Dominique Wilkins was a steal for Kevin Loughery. Hawks got nation's No. 3 pick from Utah for John Drew, Freeman Williams and $1 million, and he's worth every penny. This team is gong to be murder off offensive boards with Wilkins, Dan Roundfield and Rudy Macklin at forward. Tree Rollins gives Atlanta strong big man every team needs and now there's shot-blocking demon George Johnson in case Rollins gets hurt or in foul trouble. Eddie Johnson and Rory Sparrow form an oh-so-quick backcourt.

DETROIT — This club was 21-17 after All-Star break last season and won 18 games more than the year before. Isiah Thomas and Kelly Tripucka are famous reasons why, but center Bill Laimbeer came over from Cleveland in the last 30 games and quietly averaged 11.3 rebounds down the stretch to help turn it around. Kent Benson has been starting at power forward and has been a "rebounding bitch," according to one source.

CHICAGO — Trading Gilmore has to hurt. Dave Corzine is certainly not the answer in the middle. Mark Olberding, who came over with Corzine from San Antonio, has not reported in an attempt to renegotiate, which doesn't help. Plusses? New Coach Paul Westhead, forward David Greenwood, guards Reggie Theus, Ronnie Lester and controversial rookie Quintin Dailey.

INDIANA — The Pacers have lost one free agent (Louis Orr) from last year's 35-47 club, and figure to lose another (John Davis) but they still have to be better than Cleveland right? Clark Kellogg will be one of league's best rookies.

CLEVELAND — Hardy, har, har. Actually, Cavs will be much improved, which is not hard when you consider last year's ridiculous 16-67 record. But where else does a coach (Bill Musselman) resign eight days before the start of the season? New Coach Tom Nissalke is left with a colorless team with names like Geoff Huston, Ron Brewer, James Edwards, Cliff Robinson and Scott Wedman to play with No. 1 pick John Bagley, from Boston College can play, even at 5-feet-11.

WESTERN CONFERENCE
Midwest Division

SAN ANTONIO — Plenty of changes here, but still the team to beat. Besides Gilmore, Spurs have added Bill Willoughby at forward and Mike Dunleavy at guard. But a starting five of Gilmore, Mike Mitchell and Eugene Banks (for now) up front with scoring machine George Gervin and Johnny Moore (more assists, 9.6, than points, 9.4, last season) is enough to win the division, if now much else.

DENVER — League's run-and-gun squad (Nuggets last year became only team in league history to score more than 100 points in every game) won't stop anybody, but is tough to stop. Kiki Vandeweghe, Alex English, Dan Issel and Billy McKinney race to fill it up, while McKinney's backcourt mate, T.R. Dunn, is only one to ever take anything resembling a defensive. Fun to watch.

KANSAS CITY — Just a hunch that former Knick-Net Williams will bring Kings up past Maloneless Rockets. First-round pick LaSalle Thompson hasn't signed yet, but a slimmed-down Reggie King is looking good after a poor '81-'82 season and another former Knick-Net, Mike Woodson, has found a home at small forward. Steve Johnson is improving — and still foul-prone at center.

HOUSTON — Caldwell Jones take over for Malone in middle, 6-foot-9 Joe Bryant takes over for retired Robert Reid as an over-sized guard and Allan Leavell runs the club. Starting forwards are Elvin Hayes and Wally Walker. No. 1 pick Terry Teagle signed late and the rookie surprise has been 6-foot-4 second-round pick Jeff Taylor of Texas Tech.

DALLAS — Coach Dick Motta till has not decided on whether Jay Vincent or Mark Aguirre is his small forward. Rolando Blackman and Brad Davis - outplaying Kelvin Ransey — look like the guards, first-rounder Bill Garnett is the big forward and Kurt Nimphius (yes, the Kurt Nimphius) is the center.

UTAH — Adrian Dantley, John Drew and Darrell Griffith still and the Jazz (25-57 last season) still stink. 'Nuf said.

Pacific Division

LOS ANGELES — Defending champs have everyone back — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Kurt Rambis, Jamaal Wilkes, Magic Johnson, Norm Nixon, Michael Cooper and, any day now, Bob McAdoo — and have added top college player in the nation last year, James Worthy. After slow start when he reported out of shape, Worthy has lived up to press clippings. Only if old age suddenly attacks 34-year-old Abdul-Jabbar will L.A. fail to win its third crown.

SEATTLE — Hope springs eternal in Seattle, and for good reason; Jack Sikma, Gus Williams and a rejuvenated David Thompson, to name three. Sonics have had strong pre-season, Lonnie Shelton reported to camp in shape, and Greg Kelser has been sensational at small forward. Danny Vranes, James Donaldson and Fred Brown provide all kinds of depth.

PHOENIX — Lucas has given patsy Suns some much-needed muscle teaming with Larry Nance and center Alvin Adams up front. And they don't call No. 1 pick David Thirdkill "Sheriff" for nothing. Dennis Johnson still doesn't practice but is there on game day. Kyle Macy looks set at point guard, and swingman Walter Davis is once again looking like "fastest 6-foot-6 man in the world."

PORTLAND — Top newcomer is Kenny Carr, who joins Calvin Natt at forward. Other starters are holdovers Mychael Thompson at center, and guards Darnell Valentine — having great pre-season — and Jim Paxson.

GOLDEN STATE — Too many question marks. Can Al Attles get Richardson — who knocks the famous Lorenzo Romar out of the starting lineup — to play under control? Will first-round pick Lester Conner ever sign? Has center J.B. Carroll really cut loose from his "Just Breathin'" reputation? Without question, Larry Smith will rebound and World Free will score.

SAN DIEGO — They were 17-45 last year, and Terry Cummings, No. 2 pick in entire draft, has not signed a contract. Jerome Whitehead is the center, except for once a week when a 6-foot-11 redhead named Bill Walton fills in. Once a week, Clippers will be tough. Tom Chambers and Michael Brooks are good young forwards, but backcourt is hurtin' for certain.

Two-thirds of league lost money last year

Rising attendance belies widespread financial difficulties

Average attendance may be impressive in most NBA cities, but profits are not—few teams manage to earn money yearly

By FRED MITCHELL
Chicago Tribune

The National Basketball Association headlined the fact that the league set an attendance record last season, but the bottom line revealed that two-thirds of the 23 teams lost money. Somewhere in between these lines lies the truth regarding the league's future.

The benefits and salaries of NBA players averaged $218,000 last season, the highest of any sport in America. The trend toward even higher salaries is disturbing to owners and fans alike, who have to pay the freight to see the stars play.

The Chicago Bulls, known around the league as a prudent organization, are an example of a franchise trying to maintain the delicate balance between running a successful business and putting a competitive team on the court. But they were one of the teams that lost money, because of a drop in attendance.

Why didn't the Bulls bid for free-agent superstars like Moses Malone or Bernard King to improve their product?

"First of all, there is no direct correlation between the amount of money spent on payrolls and the performance on the court," said Jonathan Kovler, the team's vice president of operations. "Our ticket sales are down about 10 percent from last season and our salaries are up.

"There are probably three reasons for that, and in this order: 1) Lack of the Bulls being in the playoffs last season, 2) the economy and 3) Quintin Dailey. Part of that equation, the economy, has affected every team in the league."

Rod Thorn, the Bulls' general manager, wouldn't mind trying his luck in the free-agent market.

"With money, you can buy the best team in three to five years. I'm not saying that's good or bad. I personally don't like it. But that's the rules. It's a players' market. The rich teams are able to take chances. A fringe player can be signed by a rich team because they can afford to take a chance."

The Bulls averaged about 9,100 fans last season in Chicago Stadium, which can seat nearly 20,000. "We would need to average at least 12,000 fans to get to the break-even point," Kovler said. "Our sources of revenue are gate receipts and television revenue, but the expenses keep going up every year."

Each team receives $1 million a year from the league's contract with network television. And individual teams strike deals with local stations, WGN-TV and SportsVision in the Bulls' case.

With the NBA's 37th season set to begin Friday night, the league has not yet signed a collective bargaining agreement. The old one expired in June.

"In a way, a strike would be a real financial blessing for the owners," said Cleveland Cavaliers owner Ted Stepien, whose team had the second-worst attendance average in the NBA last season. "This isn't football, where there's all kinds of money floating around. The players had better understand what's in the pockets of the owners before they destroy the sport."

Curiously, the Seattle SuperSonics, who again led the NBA in average attendance (18,300) last season, are holding the line on expenses as much as any other team.

Bruins meet Bonneville in last home game

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Bruins frittered away a win last week in a non-conference game.

They can't be so generous the next two times out if they are to have any chance of making the state playoffs.

The Bruins entertain the Bonneville Bees at 8 p.m. Friday in their final home appearance of the season — and a victory is a must. The same is true when they go to Blackfoot at 6 p.m. next Friday.

Because they lost back-to-back games to Highland and Skyline, the Bruins don't "control their destiny." They have to have two kinds of help — provided they can win the final two games themselves.

Highland apparently has the Gem State Conference's No. 1 berth in the playoffs in hand. Skyline is ahead of Twin Falls for the second spot and Bonneville could be ahead of Skyline, depending on how you look at it.

On the field it's a three-way parlay. Since Twin Falls lost to Skyline, it has to beat Bonneville, which in turn must beat Skyline in the season finale. That's because ties would be resolved through the head-to-head meeting. Only if it happened the way described would things get back to equal.

Then, Twin Falls would have to win a coin flip.

"We go into the last two weeks in a poorer position than the other two, but I think the players are ready to make a try for it," Twin Falls Coach Bill Jones said.

It took the weekend for Twin Falls to put that defeat to Borah behind it. Twin Falls led 17-0 with 8:57 left and wound up losing — for the 21st straight time to the Lions — 19-17.

"I wasn't feeling very good watching it (Friday night at Bronco Stadium) and looking at the film over the weekend just made me madder and madder. We had so many breakdowns. So many mental mistakes. I had a lousy weekend," Jones said. "But I started getting over it Monday and I think the kids have bounced back pretty well. I'm hoping they've discovered a little more about what life and football are all about. One thing that encouraged me was I did see a few tears in the dressing room after the game."

Bonneville, which has lost only to Highland in conference, brings a much different team record into this game than was expected when the season started. The Bees were the pre-season favorite, largely because they won their last seven games a year ago and piled up a lot of points doing it. Most of those folks were back.

But in the last four weeks, the Bees have scored just five touchdowns to whittle down their offensive reputation. The defensive unit has picked up the string, however, shuting out three of the last five opponents and allowing a fourth a field goal.

"Turnovers are the things that have been killing them," Jones said. "In the rainstorm against Pocatello they fumbled eight times and lost six of them. They were behind 3-0 practically the whole game and pulled it out in the last couple of minutes. They have four turnovers against Minico. But they held Minico to a minus eight yards rushing," the coach pointed out.

"Their defense is playing everyone tough. We feel that we can run the veer against them and some of our passes should be open. So we'll continue, as we have all year, working on the necessities."

Defensively Twin Falls has to expect its middle to be tested.

"They go in a double tight (end formation) and run it right at you," Jones said. "They have an excellent back in Kirk Copeland and their quarterback (Mike Biddulph) handles the veer well."

Should Twin Falls come up with two victories to conclude the season, this group will tie for the best record in the last 16 years.

Most other playoff berths decided

Carey duels Camas for Sawtooth title

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

Conference championships could still be shared but on the final week of the high school football season, most playoff berths for Magic Valley teams already are pretty well in hand.

Only one title is really up for grabs and that will be settled at 2 p.m. Friday when Carey invades Camas County. Both are undefeated in the Sawtooth Conference and both are assured of advancing to eight-man post-season play next week.

For Murtaugh and Jerome it's the happy situation of win or tie. Murtaugh can wind up an undefeated year when it entertains the Mackay Miners at 1:30 p.m. Friday and take that momentum into the A-4 playoffs. A loss to Mackay would pull the Red Devils into a tie with Castleford for the Magic Valley Conference title but since Murtaugh won the mutual game, it should get the playoff nod.

Jerome can wrap up the A-2 playoff bid by beating the Indians at Buhl. That one kicks off at 7:30 p.m.

Kimberly has its A-3 bid in hand and can cement that by dropping Glenns Ferry while Declo can nail down the No. 2 berth by beating the Trojans at Wendell.

At first blush there doesn't seem a lot for Camas County and Carey to play for. After all, they have their post-season berths and while the conference title is nice, it has a tendency to tarnish in the comparison.

But Carey Coach Heber Kirkland says there is considerably more.

"What's really at stake is the home-field advantage in the first round of the playoffs. If we can beat Camas County, our first game will be here," Kirkland said.

> 'What's really at stake is the home-field advantage in the first round of the playoffs. If we can beat Camas County, our first game will be here.'
> —Carey Coach Heber Kirkland

The coach also wonders about the mental aspects of his team as they had to flurry in the fourth quarter to put lightly-regarded Rockland behind them. "They had us pretty well scouted so we may have to change some things," he said. "But I felt we were a little flat, too."

Kirkland sees defense as a key in this game, noting Lonnie Funkhouser, Musher quarterback, is a double threat. "You have to contain Funkhouser's scrambling," Kirkland said. "When he gets out of the pocket is when he's the most dangerous."

Kirkland noted others that deserve special attention are (Mike Faulkner, who is a slashing type runner who cuts back-a-lot, You-can't-over-pursue-on him. And we'll have to watch Shannon Wolf, who is their best pass catcher."

Offensively Kirkland said Carey will be using "four running backs to keep a fresh one in there. We'll have Todd Wesche back this week. He broke his finger against Shoshone and missed the last two. He's our swiftest and it's good to have him back."

Kirkland added that the Mushers' defense has been impressive (five shutouts in eight games). "They play a lot of 4-3 and move very well as a unit. They may not have the great individual players but they have a lot of good defensive people and they shift in that formation very well."

In other action, the Minico Spartans draw a tough non-conference foe in trying to brake a five-game skid. The Spartans will be home to the Meridian Warriors, who were considered the state's best until falling to Borah two weeks ago.

Burley liked its last trip into the Third District, knocking off Caldwell 24-22 for its second win of the season. So Coach John Billetz will take his Bobcats back to Nampa, a team that defeated Caldwell 20-13 in mid-September.

The only thing that counts in the A-3 Canyon Conference is the Declo at Wendell matchup. Finishing out the string there, Gooding will visit Filer while Glenns Ferry is at Kimberly. In a non-conference game, the Valley Vikings, smarting from two straight losses that knocked them out of playoff contention, will entertain Oakley.

Castleford takes the long trip to Raft River, where it is hoping a win coupled with a Mackay upset of Murtaugh will give it a share of the league title. On the other end, the winner of the Hansen at Hagerman game will leave the other in the loop cellar.

ering Montana State was the leading defensive team in the league coming into the game."

Although Erickson admitted the Vandal defense "had its best game of the season" in beating Montana State, he sees problems with the BSU offense.

"Their running back tandem of (fullback Larry) Farmer and (tailback Rodney) Webster is excellent," he said.

The question remains, however, on the performance of sophomore quarterback Gerald DesPres, who was great last week and mediocre the week before. "DesPres is a great competitor," Erickson said, explaining that the youngster can rebound from adversity in on possession.

Monday Criner pronounced Idaho quarterback Ken Hobart "the best athlete in the conference."

"Jim is given to statements like that," Erickson replied with a smile. "But he (Hobart) just might be. I know when he plays well, we play well. He didn't have a good day against Montana and you saw what happened there. Against Montana State he was spectacular.

"But anytime we or ISU or Montana or anyone does anything offensively, a lot depends on the quarterback. When (ISU's Paul) Peterson is hot, ISU wins. When (Marty) Mornhinweg is playing well, Montana wins. So I have to feel that if DesPres has a game like he did last week, we'll have to play very well to beat Boise State."

From an offensive standpoint, Erickson sees the BSU defensive unit as a major problem. "We've already discussed their linebackers and secondary. Up front they use a lot of different fronts. Probably more than any team in the league. You have to come off (the ball) and block and the guys (running backs) have to run well.

"We're excited about going down there. It is a tremendous rivalry. Our success win-loss-wise hasn't been all that great so I can't imagine our guys not getting up for this one."

Idaho came through the Montana State game "fairly decent," having only two question marks. Lineman Frank Moreno has a knee problem that could hold him out. Erickson expected receiver Curt Vestman back despite a minor leg problem.

It marked the first time this year Idaho went through a game without losing a defensive player. Last week linebacker Larry White and lineman Jay Wolfe, in practice, were lost for the season to knee injuries.

As for Boise State, the Broncos could regain the services of defensive end Michel Bourgeau in time for Saturday's game.

Another Bronco defection: sub quarterback Rebozzi

BOISE (UPI) — Once-promising quarterback Rick Rebozzi has left the Boise State football team, but he and Broncos Coach Jim Criner have given conflicting versions of the circumstances surrounding the unfriendly departure.

"Rick got kicked off the team as of last Friday," Criner said Tuesday. "I kicked Rick out of a meeting because Rick was non-attentive. Rick's attitude and performance were not good for the football team."

Rebozzi, whose status as a candidate for the starting quarterback's job last year was destroyed by academic ineligibility, said it was his decision to leave the team.

Rebozzi's departure coincided with the exit from the Broncos squad of senior fullback Paul DiLulo due to what Criner called "personal problems." But there was no indication that the two departures were related.

The senior quarterback was used sparingly on special teams this year after challenging junior Tim Klena and sophomore Gerald DesPres last spring for the No. 1 quarterback's post — a battle eventually was won by DesPres.

Rebozzi was fighting Klena for the same job the season before, but he was declared academically ineligible for the rest of the 1981 season after he had a friend take an English competency test for him. Ironically, the friend flunked the examination.

they are. Craig, who had run second to Foote throughout most of the season, reversed roles and beat Foote by 23 seconds. "Kurt will get a little more serious about it now," Dunne commented. Moreover, only 30 seconds separated Craig and fourth-place finisher Bartholomew.

Salmon, Moscow, Madison, American Falls and Middleton are expected to push Jerome for the title. Middleton, which placed second to the Tigers in the state A-2 track finals, particularly concerns Dunne. "They've got a growing program," he said.

As for the girls, Wood River will likely fight for the top spot with Weiser and possibly Nampa Christian. "It looks like they'll be pretty awesome," Shay warned. "Nampa Christian is pretty tough, too. We'll have to wait and see about them."

The Wolverines bested Nampa Christian by 10 points but lost to Weiser by "about 100," in Shay's estimation, at the Boise City Invitational meet last month. However, the participation of Michele Jaques, Wood River's standout freshman, in the junior varsity race and the presence of the Class-A schools helped widen the difference.

To eliminate the difference this time, Shay said the Wolverines, who have counted on Maureen McGinnis, defending individual champion Lori Pascoe and Jaques all season, must have strong supporting efforts from their fourth-, fifth- and sixth-best runners.

Jerome Coach Skip Andrew realistically doesn't see his girls finishing higher than fourth. Andrew admitted that the Tigers could edge Nampa Christian for third, but added, "There's no way we can handle Weiser and Wood River."

East spikers drill Monday

KIMBERLY — The Magic Valley East All-Star volleyball squad will hold its first practice at 3:30 p.m. Monday in Kimberly High School's gymnasium, Bulldog Coach Jean Emerson announced Wednesday.

Hunters' success declines

SALMON (UPI) — The success rate for deer and elk hunters in the Salmon area during the first four days of the season fell sharply compared to 1981, says the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

Department officials said only 14 percent of the 747 hunters checked at Salmon-area stations between Oct. 20-24 were able to bag a deer or elk. The figure compares to a 27-percent success rate for the same period of 1981, they said.

Tom Parker, regional wildlife manager, said the decline was due to a new regulation this year limiting the harvest to bucks only on opening day.

"The decrease in harvest was planned to restrict the number of does harvested, due to the unusually severe winter last year," Parker said.

Hunting for either sex began Wednesday in the region. Hunters will be allowed to take either does or bucks until Nov. 1, when the season reverts back to buck-only until it ends Nov. 14.

Chinese cagers open tour

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (UPI) — The Republic of China National basketball team, which visited Twin Falls and the College of Southern Idaho last year, will open an 18-game exhibition tour of the United States by playing West Virginia Tech at Montgomery tonight.

The Taiwan team, headquartered at the University of Charleston, toured the West Virginia capitol Wednesday. The Taiwanese play seven games against small colleges in West Virginia before departing for Washington, D.C., and a Nov. 6 game against George Washington. From there, they head to the Midwest.

After the game at West Virginia Tech, the West Virginia schedule includes Bluefield State on Saturday, Glenville on Sunday, West Virginia Wesleyan Monday, University of Charleston Tuesday, Salem Wednesday and Fairmont next Thursday.

After the game at George Washington, the Chinese schedule includes:

Nov. 9 — Purdue; Nov. 10 — DePauw (Ind.); Nov. 12 — Kentucky Wesleyan; Nov. 13 — Evansville; Nov. 15 — Butler; Nov. 16 — Illinois State; Nov. 18 — Indiana; Nov. 20 — Cincinnati; Nov. 22 — Miami; Nov. 23 — Xavier.

U.S. Davis Cup team formed

NEW YORK (UPI) — John McEnroe, Peter Fleming, Gene Mayer and Elliot Teltscher have been named to the United States Davis Cup team that will face France in the 1982 final at Grenoble, France, it was announced Wednesday.

The matches, four singles and a doubles, will be played Nov. 26-28 indoors on clay. It will be the fourth appearance in the finals for the U.S. in the past five years. The U.S. won the event in 1978, 1979 and 1980.

Captain Arthur Ashe also announced that Jimmy Arias, one of the promising young players in the U.S., will serve as a practice player on the squad.

College nine seeks China trip

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — UC-San Diego athletic officials said Wednesday they must raise $20,000 by next Friday if their baseball team is to become the first American team to tour the People's Republic of China.

Coach Lyle Yates said he is "preparing blindly" for the five scheduled exhibition games against Chinese teams he knows nothing about.

Athletic Director Judith M. Sweet said about half the $40,000 needed to pay for the trip had already been pledged by members of the community and parents of the baseball players.

The team's itinerary provides the 21-man roster ample sightseeing opportunities and calls for five televised games in Peking, Xian, Shanghai, Chend Du and Ching Du.

The trip is scheduled to last 14 days, Dec. 11 through 25.

Big 10 grid teams suffering lean times

By STEVE DALEY
Chicago Tribune

BO SCHEMBECHLER
'Revels' in defeats?

The fellow in the back of the elevator at the World Series in St. Louis had a question. He addressed it to no one in particular.

"Are there any good football teams in the Big 10?" he wanted to know.

"Are there any good football teams in the Midwest?" was the reply.

Well, if you think of Nebraska as being part of the Midwest, then maybe there's one college team worth discussing this season. But there is no question that football in the heartland has fallen on lean times.

Michigan State is 0-7, and has lost five straight conference games for the first time in its history. Minnesota, 3-4, lost to Northwestern and hasn't won a game since beating Washington State Sept. 25. That weekend, you may recall, some folks were using the word, "sleeper" to describe the Gophers' Rose Bowl chances.

A couple of weeks ago, Indiana Coach Lee Corso characterized his team as one of several "lurking" in the background, ready to pilfer the Big 10 title should Michigan and Illinois falter. All that was lurking was a 49-25 thumping from Ohio State on Saturday.

That's what it's come down to, folks. Runaway self-delusion. Indiana is 3-4, 2-3 in the conference and headed nowhere. Somehow, coaches and conference functionaries are the last to get the word.

While the newspaper polls and various listings of Top 20s are imperfect instruments for measuring football success, it is difficult to argue with the nearly unanimous consent that only one team in the Midwest's storied conference belongs.

The University of Michigan, with a 5-2 record and losses to Notre Dame and UCLA, turns up in in both the AP and UPI rankings this week, though force of habit may play a role in that determination. The rest of the conference is either hopelessly adrift or, like the recent World Series, interesting.

Illinois, for example, is interesting. Great offense, great quarterback and a 26-21 loss to Ohio State that doesn't make any more sense than Earle Bruce's coaching.

Illini Coach Mike White is hard at work on the one-dimensional nature of his club, but even a trip to Pasadena — still a possibility — will not mean this is a first-rate football team. Not this season.

The chinks in football operations — like the ones in Ann Arbor and Champaign were exposed early and often by teams from elsewhere. Pittsburgh, slumming through the Big 10, used a pass rush and better athletes on defense to put the clamps on Illinois' Tony Eason and his offense.

The 20-3 defeat was a measure of just how far White has to go with his football program — and in football terms, his may be the only one in the conference going anywhere at all.

Bo Schembechler seems to revel in his non-conference defeats. After the 31-27 loss to UCLA last month, the Michigan coach pointed out with pride that his 1980 club lost to Notre Dame and South Carolina before moving on to a Rose Bowl victory over Washington.

Perhaps it is the long look Schembechler gets to take at his Big 10 schedule that keeps him composed while dropping games to Notre Dame and schools from the West Coast. At the moment, and despite assurances that talent within the conference was spreading out, it's strictly Big 1 and Big 1A in the Big 10.

Bizarre events in 1981 — Iowa's Rose Bowl apperance and a year in which Wisconsin somehow beat Michigan and Ohio State — clouded the Big 10 picture coming into this season. Both those clubs have reverted to form, however, with Iowa losing to Iowa State and Wisconsin absorbing a 51-26 defeat by UCLA.

Everywhere you look, in fact, Big 10 schools are being played for chumps by Stanford and Miami, USC and Iowa State. And all this unpleasantness is taking place while Big 10 recruiters and playmakers are signing up blond quarterbacks and peeking at the Bill Walsh playbook.

The Big 10 isn't suffering because conference football is stuck in time. After all, Wisconsin coach Dave McClain, hardly a trendsetter in his profession, tried to double-dribble his way past Illinois last Saturday.

The Big 10 is in transition; it simply isn't doing a very capable job of it. The imported quarterbacks, the Babe Laufenbergs and Scott Campbells, are floundering within offensive systems that work just fine within the conference.

The rub comes in places like Pittsburgh and Southern California. Watching Michigan surrender a 21-point lead at home to UCLA, at least one observer noted that when you got past Wolverine pass catcher Anthony Carter, the bigger, faster and more talented athletes were not the ones playing for Bo Schembechler. And Michigan is the best the Big 10 has available.

The same rule applies to the Illinois-Pitt game. The boys from Champaign had the concept and the quarterback; Pitt had the athletes.

That college football would move past a few schools in the Midwest is not surprising. That an entire conference, and one as celebrated and self-important as the Big 10, would get left behind raises some questions about the future and the folks in charge.

So what do you do with eight bad football teams, one fairly good team and Michigan? Send one of them to the Rose Bowl.

Surging Maryland tests No. 6 North Carolina

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI) — With five straight victories, Maryland takes its Atlantic Coast Conference title dreams to Chapel Hill, N.C., Saturday afternoon for a regionally televised clash with 6th-ranked North Carolina.

If the dreams are to continue beyond Saturday, the Terrapins, 5-2 overall, 3-0 in the ACC, must maintain their poise above all else. Many good football teams have lost poise and games in Kenan Stadium.

Maryland's five consecutive victories — over North Carolina State, Syracuse, Indiana State, Wake Forest and Duke — followed season-opening losses on the road to 5th-ranked Penn State and West Virginia.

That means the Terrapins have not defeated a ranked team or a good team on the road, or won a game they were supposed to lose. They have, however, developed poise, according to first-year Coach Bobby Ross.

"We lost close games at Penn State and West Virginia, but not because we lost our poise," Ross said Wednesday. "We had chances to win both games.

"At Penn State, we could have folded early when they scored off a blocked punt, or just before the half when they got a quick score on us. But we came back and had our chances to win. The same thing at West Virginia — we had a chance to win and went for two (on a late conversion) but we didn't.

"Those games made us stronger and so have some of our other games. We have few seniors, but the ones we have are good, solid people who won't be awed by anything they see Saturday. That's the one thing that would disappoint me Saturday — if we don't play with poise."

Another thing on Ross' mind is the Tar Heels' penchant for doing the unexpected. More than once through the years, under different coaches, North Carolina has scored off a trick play, a fluke play or the play no one would expect in a particular situation.

Ross is trying to prepare his team for such a situation. He doesn't want a weird happening early to take his team out of the game.

"The unexpected play early can distract a team for the entire game," said Ross. "We work on such things every week in practice. We don't want our guys to be taken by surprise."

Peete, 131 others open play in Disney World tournament

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (UPI) — Calvin Peete, winner of last week's Pensacola Open, heads a field of 132 professional golfers for today's opening round of the $400,000 Walt Disney World Classic.

The tournament, which will be played on three different Disney courses, will not be a team format like in the past, but will be the PGA tour's final official-money contest.

Another change is that the 1983 tour will be an all-exempt affair with the top 125 players on this season's earnings list eligible for all events in the next 12 months.

The 72-hole tournament will include a three-day pro-am with 396 amateurs teaming with the 132 pros on Disney's Magnolia, Palm and Lake Buena Vista courses. The final 18 holes Sunday will be for pros only.

Peete, the No. 4 money winner on the PGA tour, Bob Gilder (No. 7), Wayne Levi (No. 9), Jay Haas (No. 12), Andy Bean (No. 14), Scott Hoch (No. 15), Bobby Clampett (No. 16), and George Burns (No. 17) head the entries.

Hal Sutton, who became the biggest money-winning rookie ever after finishing in a two-way tie for second at Pensacola last week, is also entered.

Curtis Strange, 10th on the money list and previously committed to the tournament, withdrew Monday because of medical reasons.

In all, 19 of the PGA tour's 43 tournament winners are entered in the Disney Classic. Peete is the only top-five money winner playing this week, but 20 of the top 33 money winners are entered in the Disney Classic.

Peete, the son of migrant farm workers, has already won $317,361 on the tour this year. If he wins this week's tournament, he would finish the year in second place on the money list behind Craig Stadler and in front of Raymond Floyd. The winner of the Disney Classic will take home $72,000.

Stadler, who is not entered in the tourney, has already clinched this year's top money honors by winning $446,462.

Peete, who started playing golf 10 years ago at the age of 29, credited part of his win last weekend to "learning how to putt" on the final day.

"I still consider myself only a good putter, not a great putter," he said. "By the end of my career, I hope to consider myself a great putter."

Sutton, who reached his goal of setting a new record for first-year money winnings, said he now wants to get a tournament victory under his belt.

"I still haven't won a tournament, so that's my primary goal," said Sutton. "There's only one left this year, so I guess I'm kind of hurting there. But this winter I'll sit down and re-evaluate and set some new goals."

Group considers sites for New York Grand Prix race

NEW YORK (UPI) — Starting with a $10 million budget, New York Grand Prix Inc., announced Wednesday it is considering three sites for a Formula One auto race next year.

Departing from the usual format of such cities as Monaco, Long Beach and Detroit, where the race is run through city streets, the NYGP has zeroed in on Flushing Meadows in the borough of Queens, Mitchell Field in Nassau County (Long Island) and the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J., as the location for the Sept. 25, 1983 race.

Race organizers have a seven-year contract with the Formula One Constructors Association (FOCA) for the race that brings Grand Prix competition back to New York State for the first time since Watkins Glen went out of business after the 1980 race.

"Formula One Grand Prix races are among the world's most widely viewed sporting events," said Daniel Koren, president of the newly formed New York GP group. "Drivers are national heroes and the races are the focus of celebrations and national attention. The New York race will become part of a tradition which dates back to Le Mans at the turn of the century."

The addition of the New York area gives the United States four Grand Prix events in a 17-race program next year. Las Vegas was inaugurated last year on the grounds of Caesars Palace.

"There are three ingredients that go into staging a Grand Prix event," said Koren, a New York City educator who has held executive positions in local governments.

NFL players, owners resume talks Saturday in New York

NEW YORK (UPI) — It's back to the bargaining table for the NFL Players Association and the league's Management Council.

Labor mediator Sam Kagel announced Wednesday that the two sides will resume negotiations on Saturday at New York's Summit Hotel in yet another effort to end the NFL players' strike, which began Sept. 21 and has forced the league to call off six weeks of the season.

Kagel, in a brief statement made in San Francisco, said:

"I am authorized by Ed Garvey of the Football Players Association and Jack Donlan of the Football Management Council to announce that negotiations will resume on Saturday, Oct. 30, 1982, at New York at a site to be determined in that city."

In another development Wednesday, the general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board charged that the NFL strike was "caused and has been prolonged by the unfair labor practices" of league owners.

NLRB general counsel William Lubbers, in a complaint issued through the board's New York regional office against all 28 teams, said the Management Council "has failed and refused to bargain in good faith" with the Players Association.

A hearing has been set for Nov. 15 in New York on the charges. If the complaint is upheld in court, the striking players may be entitled to full back pay.

Lubbers listed 10 areas NFL owners, and their Management Council bargaining team, had refused to bargain in good faith.

Among the areas cited were:

• Refusing to bargain collectively on all compensation for players.

• Refusing to make any monetary proposals from mid-February to mid-July.

• Refusing to make significant counter-proposals to union demands through early October.

• disparaging the Players Association and its leadership.

Kagel was asked to mediate the dispute between the NFLPA and the Management Council on Oct. 12 by Kay McMurray, the director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service in Washington. Talks began in earnest at the Hunt Valley Inn in Maryland but broke off on Oct. 23 when Kagel decided no progress was being made on the major issue — the means of distributing the league's $1.6 billion offer to the union spread over five years.

The Players Association has been calling for a wage scale tied to a central fund while the Management Council is adamant about maintaining the policy of individual player negotiations.

The talks resume just as the walkout enters its most crucial period — amid rumors the entire season may soon be canceled.

On Tuesday, Garvey said he believed NFL owners were set to deliver an ultimatum to the players on Friday to either accept a new wage proposal or face cancellation of the season.

A spokesman for the Management Council says Garvey's comments are off base but he didn't rule out the possibility of the owners coming up with a new plan on Saturday.

"As far as the alleged take it or leave it offer, that's totally untrue," said Jim Miller, director of information for the Management Council. "We're not in the practice of speculating on what we might or might not give."

As it stands now, each of the 28 NFL teams has missed six games. If a settlement can be worked out by the end of the weekend, it is possible to resume the season with a 12-game schedule instead of 16, as two of the lost dates can be made up, according to the league. However, if talks again falter and the league calls off a seventh week of games, that could place the season in jeopardy.

Although Commissioner Pete Rozelle says that dipping below a 12-game season is not the final cutoff point for calling off the season, he hedged a bit.

"But at that point it becomes important as to who you're playing," Rozelle said.

Some hope expressed for Leveille

VANCOUVER (UPI) — Young Boston Bruin forward Normand Leveille battled through a fourth day in a coma Wednesday but doctors offered a glimmer of hope because his condition appears not to have deteriorated.

"Dr. (Barrie) Woodhurst told his parents that his condition had not changed," said Nate Greenberg, the Bruins' public relations director who is acting as spokesman for Woodhurst and Leveille's parents.

"On the negative side of the coin, there has been no improvement, but on the positive side, there has been no deterioration either," Greenberg said. "The doctor said that the longer he continues without regressing, the better it is."

Leveille, 19, has been in a coma in "poor condition" at Vancouver General Hospital and breathing with the aid of a respirator since he was rushed by ambulance from the Pacific Coliseum Saturday. He collapsed with a brain hemorrhage in the Boston dressing room during the first period intermission of a game against the Vancouver Canucks.

Woodhurst, who has refused to talk to reporters, has been meeting with Leveille's parents, Jacques and Therese, each morning after examining the hockey player.

"He (Woodhurst) seemed to put the emphasis on the not regressing part and said that was a positive sign," Greenberg said.

Leveille's parents were joined in Vancouver late Tuesday by Normand's older brother, Daniel, and a relative, who has been acting as an interpreter between Woodhurst and the French-speaking parents.

On Tuesday, Greenberg said the doctor told the parents that Leveille had suffered some brain damage, but the extent was unknown.

Long Beach gridder still paralyzed

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI) — Five weeks after he broke his neck in a game against UCLA, Long Beach State safety Todd Hart remains paralyzed in the intensive care unit at Huntington Memorial Hospital.

Hart, who has lost 35 of his 165 pounds, continues to be fed intravenously. The injury to his third, fourth and fifth cervical vetebrae affected his breathing, so a tracheotomy tube runs from a respirator into a hole in his throat.

The sophomore communicates by mouthing words — his parents and the nurses have become expert lip readers — and attracts attention by clicking his tongue.

"Todd's a fighter, but he's also a human being," said his father, Orange County sheriff's Lt. Wyatt Hart. "The emotional traumas he's going through are just awesome. When was the last time you thought about breathing? He tries to be as strong as he can, and to be honest with you, I get my strength from him.

"But he's scared and what's tough is that athletes are used to seeing major results from major effort, but we've got a long haul. The first step is getting off that respirator."

No one knows if Hart, 3½ months beyond his 19th birthday, will ever regain movement.

"I've told the doctors, 'Don't give me all the bad news,'" said his father. "I know what the worst could be. What I want is the positive points — but not false hopes.

"We don't tell Todd any false hopes. We don't lie to him. He knows exactly what the situation is and where he's going."

When he is free of the breathing machine, Todd will be moved to an undetermined spinal rehabilitation center in the West.

Meanwhile, he lies on his back near a bulletin board on a wall filled with good wishes, including a telegram from President Reagan and an autographed picture of Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry.

There have been calls from Los Angeles Rams owner Georgia Frontiere, offering "anything you need," and UCLA Coach Terry Donahue stops by once or twice a week.

"Hart's morale is a serious concern, but he isn't bitter. He sent a message to UCLA players, stating: 'I have no animosity, nothing against any of the players. It was a freak accident.'"

Chandler retains WBA bantamweight crown

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (UPI) — Jeff Chandler retained his World Boxing Association bantamweight title for the seventh time Wednesday night, stopping a bloodied Miguel Iriarte of Panama midway through the ninth round.

Chandler stunned Iriarte, the WBA's top-ranked contender, with a left-right combination and backed the challenger into his corner with a flurry of jabs and uppercuts.

Referee Joe Cortez stopped the scheduled 15-rounder at 2:20 of the ninth round after Chandler landed at least 15 unanswered punches.

Iriarte controlled the first two rounds as Chandler, somewhat tentative after a five-month layoff, backpeddled from the challenger's jabs. But the champion began to dominate in the fourth round and opened a cut on the bridge of Iriarte's nose midway through the sixth round.

The victory raised Chandler's record to 29-0-2 with 16 knockouts. Iriarte's mark dropped to 14-2-2-1.

Chandler has easily swept through his division since winning the crown from Julian Solis in 1980 and shows no signs of easing up.

"I'm hungrier as champion than I was as a challenger," he has said. "I don't care about the money right now. First I was happy to be an athlete. Then I was glad to be one of the best, a champion. Now I want to be the greatest champion."

WBA officials, who have allowed heavyweight champion Mike Weaver to remain idle for 13 months without threatening him with loss of his title, have forced Chandler to defend his crown against the top contender every six months.

But Chandler has had little trouble in any of the bouts.

"I'm going to smoke out this division, that's for sure," he said. "I'm going to still be champ when I'm 99."

MARVELOUS M. HAGLER
Faces Fulgencio Obelmejias

SAN REMO, Italy (UPI) — Marvelous Marvin Hagler says he hopes to step into the ring against middleweight boxing challenger Fulgencio Obelmejias of Venezuela wearing his favorite color — red — this Sunday when they fight for the world middleweight crown.

But the joint World Boxing Association (WBA) and World Boxing Council champion from Newark, New Jersey, didn't necessarily mean red trunks.

He was talking about boxing gloves.

"I love to fight with red gloves," Hagler told reporters at this Italian seaside resort near the French border. "It's my favorite color. In the ring it's the baddest color of all."

Hagler, who defeated Obelmejias in a 1981 defense of his middleweight crown in Boston, spoke to reporters after a workout wearing a red jacket with the words "destroy, devastate" written on the back.

The scheduled 15-round bout will be televised live to the United States.

Hagler said he developed his preference for colorful gloves as a boy after seeing former champion Emile Griffith enter the ring wearing a pair of blue gloves years ago.

The American also attributed his imposing shaved head to the fact that "my mother always hated long hair."

Hagler has been working out at his training camp in this Mediterranean gambling resort for a week to a daily audience of dozens of suppporters.

Obelmejias, 29, who boasts a record of 35 career victories, 32 of them by knockout, has been training in the town of Bogliasco, Italy, near the port city of Genoa, for most of October.

New York says it may drop Off-Track Betting program

NEW YORK (UPI) — Waning multi-million dollar profits from the Off-Track Betting Corp. may force the betting system out of business as early as 1986, a report by the state comptroller said Wednesday.

OTB was begun in 1970 to raise revenues and discourage illegal gambling. It provided the city and state with about $78 million in fiscal 1982.

But in his report, state Comptroller Edward Regan cited the recession and competition from other gambling media, including lotteries, as primary factors that have stagnated the OTB profit picture.

In addition, he said, the 12-month racing calendar is already full and cannot be expanded to substantially increase betting revenues.

"Based on these trends, OTB's operating expenditures and mandated distributions will exceed its operating revenues by fiscal 1986," Regan said.

"If this occurs, not only will there be no residual revenues payable to New York City, but OTB will either have to retrench or discontinue operations."

He went on to warn that should OTB collapse, the state's entire parimutuel racing and breeding industry could be put in jeopardy. Racing officials agree that without OTB support, it would be nearly impossible to maintain a nationally competitive purse structure.

The comptroller, who is running for re-election this year on the Republican line, said the system must "enhance its revenues, reduce its expenditures or obtain legislative relief in the distribution its funds to the racing industry and to other government entities."

The Regan report said that after early years of tremendous growth, the annual handle or actual wagers leveled off, then began declining.

Over the last seven years, the report said, the handle increased only 16 percent, from $759 million to $883 million. At the same time, operating expenses increased 42 percent and the share distributed to the struggling racing industry rose 67 percent.

Regan's figures showed the city actually earned $14 million less this year compared to 1975. Though its earnings from a surcharge on winning bets increased from $25 million to $29 million, the redual payments to the city, made after OTB expenses are paid, dropped from $40 million to $21 million over the seven-year period.

Regan advised the legislature to begin a review of how OTB profits are distributed to see if a "comprehensive restructuring of the entire industry is required."

His report noted that OTB has forwarded four proposals to the state legislature to boost revenues, including betting on other professional sports, elimination of surcharges on certain bets, and bringing live television or more live race calls into OTB offices.

Kemp says he won't sign with Chisox after Nov. 7

CHICAGO (UPI) — Outfielder Steve Kemp has given the Chicago White Sox a Nov. 7 deadline to sign him or give up rights and let him seek the highest bidder.

In letters sent Tuesday to the Chicago news media, Kemp and his agent, Dick Moss, said if Kemp is not signed by their deadline, he will not negotiate further with the Sox. And, they said, they will regard any subsequent attempt to retain rights as a part of collusion with other owners to prevent him from getting better offers.

If that happens, Moss indicated, he may sue.

"If the Sox do retain rights, Steve is going to be a cause celebre all over again," Moss said. "That's exactly what he does not want."

Sox Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf, however, indicated the Sox won't flinch from that kind of confrontation.

"We will draft Steve," he said. "Our present intention is to retain the negotiation rights — not to restrict his freedom of movement but to give ourselves the maximum amount of time to reach an agreement."

Moss said that approach won't work.

"Steve has carefully thought about it and his decision is irrevocable. Once we have filed for free agency, we will not sign with the White Sox. If they do retain negotiating rights, it would be a futile gesture and would have only one meaning."

Moss reportedly is seeking a five-year deal for Kemp, worth between $5 million and $6 million.

Kemp hit .286 for the White Sox last year — just one percentage point above his career average. He had 19 home runs and 98 RBI. He was acquired from the Detroit Tigers a year ago in a trade for Chet Lemon.

Interim manager Lillis to keep Astros' job

HOUSTON (UPI) — Interim manager Bob Lillis has been offered and has accepted the job as the Houston Astros manager, a newspaper reported Wednesday.

The Houston Chronicle quoted sources in the organization as saying the field of candidates has narrowed to Lillis, the first base coach who replaced the fired Bill Virdon late last season.

"Things look pretty good for me," Lillis said.

Neither he nor the Astros would confirm the reports but Lillis said he "probably would accept" the job if asked.

Second baseman Joe Morgan of the San Francisco Giants, formerly of the Astros, was a leading candidate until he announced Tuesday he planned to play another year.

Lillis, 52, replaced Virdon Aug. 10 with the Astros out of contention with a 28-23 record. Virdon since has been named manager of the Montreal Expos.

Astros Board Chairman John McMullen and General Manager Al Rosen met with Lillis Monday and apparently firmed up the deal, although neither McMullen nor Rosen would confirm any impending announcement.

The reports indicated an announcement might be made Monday.

Lillis has been with the Houston organization since 1962 as an infielder, a minor league instructor, a scout and since 1973 a major league coach.

He was Virdon's right-hand man for seven years and was an obvious choice as interim manager. But when he took that temporary position, he was given little chance to succeed permanently to the manager's job.

Dallas report claims Rangers want Rader

ARLINGTON, Texas (UPI) — Doug Rader, the San Diego Padres' Triple-A manager, is Texas general manager Joe Klein's top choice to manage the Rangers next season, a team source told a Dallas newspaper Wednesday.

Klein told Rangers majority owner Eddie Chiles Tuesday that Rader is the best candidate to succeed Don Zimmer who was fired earlier this year, the source told the Dallas Times Herald.

Word of Rader's hiring was expected this week, the source said, but schedules of the Rangers' executives precluded a formal announcement.

Klein left late Tuesday for a general managers' meeting in Tampa, Fla., and Chiles has been in and out of the city campaigning for political candidates.

Klein, who has refused comment on speculation about his choice, said he did not expect to name a manager until he returned from Tampa.

"We'll probably do it early next week around Chiles' schedule," he said.

Rader was interviewed by Klein for the first time on Oct. 18 in Arlington.

The Texas general manager also has interviewed Jim Leyland, Chicago White Sox third-base coach, and Bobby Valentine, a minor league instructor with the New York Mets.

Zimmer's successor will be the 12th manager in as many years for the Rangers.

Fred Halleman examines one of the broken credit cards decorating a "tree" in his office

Corporation helps debtors, creditors come to terms

By LINDA S. MATT
United Press International

PHOENIX, Ariz. — A small, but unusual tree sits in a corner of the office where Fred Halleman works.

Instead of green leaves, broken halves of plastic credit cards hang from its branches.

That's Halleman's answer to the adage, "Money doesn't grow on trees."

Halleman is executive director of Money Management Counseling & Services of Phoenix, a non-profit corporation that helps debtors settle out of court with their creditors. Family Debt Counselors, as the group was known when it was established in Phoenix in 1958, has grown to more than 208 offices throughout the United States and Canada.

MMC&S was developed by a group of Phoenix-area businessmen who felt there were too many bankruptcies, Halleman said.

The counseling service can help people stay out of financial trouble or help them work out a plan with creditors for repaying debts. There is no charge for counseling, but clients must pay a one-time $15 fee for the repayment-plan and $12 a month for records keeping.

MMC&S is funded through creditors who are asked to return 10 percent of money they get through the repayment plans. The counseling service also accepts contributions from banks, finance companies, credit unions and individuals.

Halleman said with rising inflation and high unemployment, MMC&S has only seen the "tip of the iceberg."

"First, we're not well known," Halleman said. "There's no money for advertising. Most of our clients hear about us through word of mouth.

"Second, the problem of not managing your money is very near and dear to people. It's hard to make that decision that you need help. The people we're dealing with are the middle class and they've never had to seek that assistance."

MMC&S can help only about 12 percent of people seeking aid, Halleman said. He said 62 percent who come to MMC&S have a negative cash-flow, in which expenses exceed income above the debt they owe. But of those MMC&S agrees to help, only 1 percent return with financial problems, Halleman said.

He said a string of bad luck often precipitates financial problems.

"Generally, all of our clients have had some type of catastrophe within six months to a year," he said. "The obvious ones are loss of income, a death in the family or it could be a marital or juvenile problem," Halleman said.

For example, Halleman said MMC&S was helping a woman who became pregnant, couldn't work, and was stuck with paying full rent when

Secondary stock issues lead gains

By FRANK W. SLUSSER
United Press International

NEW YORK — With secondary issues setting the pace, the stock market scored a broad gain Wednesday as Wall Street's super rally maintained its recovery from a severe setback.

Trading was slower as many professional investors stayed on the sidelines to ponder the effects of the Treasury's plans to borrow to cover record budget deficits projected for the next couple of years.

After some wide swings, the Dow Jones industrial average found support in the final hour to gain 0.28 point to 1,006.35. It had been up as many as 7 points and down 3 during the session.

The closely followed average of 30 industrial stocks had gained 10.94 Tuesday by overcoming a 14-point deficit following Monday's 36.33 drubbing, the second worst in history.

The broader market's results were more impresive than the Dow's. Advances routed declines 1,212-444 among the 1,972 issues traded.

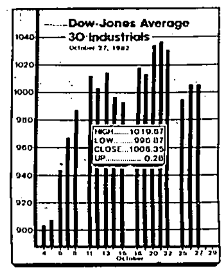
The New York Stock Exchange index rose 0.57 to 77.68 and the price of an average share increased 23 cents. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index jumped 0.80 to 135.28.

But Big Board volume dropped to 81,670,000 shares from the 102,080,000 traded Tuesday. It was the slowest turnover since 80.29 million changed hands Oct. 15.

The decreased trading indicated some investors were nervous about the course of interest rates, especially since the Treasury plans to borrow $46 billion over the next three months could produce a battle for funds.

Wall Street still was waiting for the Federal Reserve to cut its discount rate from 9½ percent and there was a growing consensus the board won't act until after next Tuesday's elections.

Some traders were heartened by speculation there would be a $300 million drop in the nation's money supply in the Fed's Friday report following an increase of $3.2 billion in the previous reading.



Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter totaled 95,788,380 shares compared with 118,071,370 traded Tuesday.

The American Stock Exchange index climbed 6.61 to 321.31 and the price of a share rose 26 cents. Advances topped declines 461-177 among the 817 issues traded. Composite volume totaled 7,643,600 shares compared with 7,475,850 traded Tuesday.

The National Association of Securities Dealers NASDAQ index of OTC stocks gained 2.28 to 212.20.

On the trading floor, Chrysler was the most active NYSE-listed issue, rising 1 to 10⅛ after a block of 611,000 shares at 10. The United Autoworkers Union decided not to strike Chrysler even though union rejected the latest contract.

Ford Motor added ¼ to 29¾ although the company late Tuesday reported a third-quarter loss of $325.4 million. General Motors, which had a $129.4 million profit, added ⅞ to 53⅞.

Boeing Co. was the second most active Big Board issue, up 2⅛ to 27⅞. American Telephone & Telegraph was third, up ¼ to 60⅛.

Bethlehem Steel dropped ¼ to 16½ after the company posted a $208.9 million third-quarter loss and said it would have a "sizable" fourth-quarter deficit.

American Can surrendered 1⅜ to 32⅝ after reporting a $153.5 million third-quarter loss.

Balrnco rose 2⅞ to 22¾ in active trading. The company attributed the rise to an investment advisory service's recommendation on the stock.

Dreyfus Corp. jumped 4¾ to 38¼. The company reported third-quarter earnings rose to $1.83 a share from $1.15 a year ago, thanks mostly to the market rally that began in mid-August.

Campbell Taggart shed 2⅛ to 36⅝ and Anheuser-Busch, which reported higher earnings, added ½ to 61. Shareholders approved Anheuser-Busch's purchase of Campbell Taggart.

Marion Laboratories climbed 3⅛ to 44½ after the company posted first-quarter earnings of 35 cents a share vs. 28 cents a year ago.

Tenneco, which raised its dividend payout to 68 cents a share from 65 cents, gained 1⅛ to 33½.

Norfolk Southern Corp., a 2⅜-point loser Tuesday, shed another 2½ to 57⅝. The railroad earlier this week reported its third-quarter earnings skidded to 97 cents a share from $2.26 a year ago.

Cray-Research added 1¼ to 39⅝ even though the company posted third-quarter earnings of 5 cents a share vs. 40 cents a year ago.

On the Amex, Dome Petroleum was the most active issue, up 3-16 to 2 9-16. Champion Home Builders followed, up ¼ to 4⅛. Wang Laboratories class B was third, up ¼ to 49¼.

Improvement on August figures

Nation's September trade deficit hits $4.2 billion

By DENIS G. GULINO
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The nation's merchandise trade deficit for September reached $4.2 billion, the third largest of the year, but an improvement over August's all time monthly record, the Commerce Department reported Wednesday.

The September deficit followed August's record $7.1 billion red ink figure and was also less than January's $5.1 billion deficit.

So far, through September the year's exports have been running 7 percent behind last year's while imports were about 5.9 percent below last year's pace.

The nine month merchandise trade deficit was $29.7 billion, the department said.

If the deficits in the remaining three months of the year average more than $3.4 billion — which analysts say is possible — 1982 will show more red ink than 1981's $39.9 billion trade deficits.

Lately the effect of what Federal Reserve officials have described as an overvalued dollar makes American goods harder to sell across the border and foreign goods a better bargain in the United States, widening the lead of import expense over export income.

The July deficit had been $2.3 billion and the June deficit was $3.4 billion. International trade in merchandise has produced uninterrupted deficits since late 1975.

The value of imports dropped 12.2 percent in September to $21.6 billion, compared to August, when imports soared a record 20.2 percent.

The value of exports in September dropped only 0.6 percent to $17.4 billion, compared to the 8.1 percent export decline in August, the department said.

Department analysts blamed statistical quirks for much of the difference between August and September but also pointed out that there were large shifts in the single categories of manufactured goods and oil.

Merchandise trade has been the losing side of the nation's dealings with other countries while the sale of services, from banking to engineering, has been a steady winner.

America's "bottom line" trading balance including services as well as trade in goods earlier showed a $3.2 billion surplus to the advantage of the United States through the first half of the year.

The trade with the rest of the world in manufactured goods showed a deficit of $1.6 billion, far less than August's deficit in that category of $2.9 billion. Exports of manufactured goods declined 4.6 percent while imports dropped 12 percent, the department said.

The cost of-oil imports in September dropped 19.3 percent to $5.03 billion, compared to an 8.6 percent climb in total cost the previous month.

The September cost of oil dropped 73 cents a barrel from August to $32 a barrel.

The volume of oil imports dropped 17.5 percent to 5.2 million barrels a day, compared to 6.1 million a day in August.

The trade deficit with the Organization of Oil Exporting Countries was $552 million in September, compared to $1.35 billion in August.

Trade in farm goods showed a surplus of $1.3 billion, just slightly less than August's surplus.

Northwest purchases gas firm

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Northwest Energy said Wednesday it has entered into an $530 million agreement with Cities Service Co. to buy the Oklahoma firm's gas subsidiary.

The acquisition will add more than 9,700 miles of pipeline in five midwestern states to Northwest's 6,000-mile natural gas transmission network serving seven western states, said Northwest's Chairman John G. McMillian.

Northwest Energy, based in Salt Lake City, will acquire all the outstanding common stock of Cities Service Gas Co., and has granted Cities Service an option to either participate in the proceeds from any future disposition of Northwest's Coal Corp. subsidiary or receive a $20 million surrender payment in 1985.

Including the outstanding debt attributed to Cities Service Gas Co., the aggregate value of the transaction is about $530 million, he said.

Cities Service Gas Co. of Oklahoma City buys, transports and sells natural gas to distributors and industrial customers in the mid-continent area of the United States, principally in Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Texas.

It operates a pipeline of more than 9,700 miles of main and branch transmission lines and 10 underground storage reservoirs.

Business Beat

EE bonds, interest rates tied

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan gave his approval Wednesday to a major change in the U.S. Savings Bonds program that will tie the yield of Series EE bonds to fluctuations in interest rates for the first time.

Beginning Monday, bonds held at least five years will earn 85 percent of the average market yield on Treasury securities during the period they are held.

"It's probably the single most major change in the Savings Bonds program in the 41 years that we've had the program," Angela Buchanan, treasurer of the United States, said.

The bonds currently earn a flat 9 percent. Under the new formula, at current interest rates, the yield would be between 9.35 percent and 10.2 percent, she said. There will be a minimum yield of 7.5 percent.

The new program, authorized by the tax increase bill passed by Congress in August, is designed to stem the flow of dollars from savings bonds to other securities sparked by soaring interest rates.

Jacobs tries again for Pabst

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — Minneapolis businessman Irwin L. Jacobs, thwarted by the government in his bid to take control of the Pabst Brewing Co., has made another offer for the brewery.

Earlier this year, the U.S. Justice Department opposed a move by JMSL Acquiring Corp., a firm linked to Jacobs, to buy Pabst stock for $24 a share. The department opposed it on antitrust grounds because the group wanted to sell a large share of Pabst assets to G. Heileman Brewing Co. of La Crosse, Wis.

Jacobs said he is again willing to pay $24 a share for stock — but group would have to get no less than 3 million shares, or about 37 percent of all stock.

Jacobs and his associates already own 1.1 million shares and that would give JMSL 50.6 percent of Pabst stock.

Promotion halt requested

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (UPI) — A product safety watchdog group said Wednesday it has requested the McDonald's restaurant chain to suspend a national promotion that includes distribution of toys that may pose choking hazards to small children.

The Playmobile toys, which change weekly, are distributed with McDonald's "Happy Meal" children's promotion. They are small figurines depicting various characters such as "Sheriff," "Indian" and others.

Judy Braiman-Lipson of the Empire State Consumers' Association said the group had asked McDonald's to recall this week's Playmobile toy, "Sheriff," because it contains a small part that barely meets Consumer Product Safety Commission guidelines.

The company's corporate headquarters in Chicago had no immediate comment.

Accounts pose bank hazards

CHICAGO (UPI) — Banks and savings and loans could "lose their shirts" in introducing new money market limited access checking accounts in the next few weeks, the director of a financial marketing research firm said Wednesday.

Richard B. Ross, the vice president of Market Facts and director of the Market Facts Household Flow of Funds, said: "Unless banks carefully analyze their market for the new account and structure and administer the account correctly, they could lose their shirts and some could lose their pants."

Mobil, Sun Oil profits skid

By United Press International

Mobil Corp., the second largest U.S. oil company, Wednesday reported its third-quarter profits plummeted 36 percent.

The company blamed the depressed world economy.

Sun Co., the 11th largest, had a 28 percent slide in third-quarter earnings and Cities Service Co., ranked 19th largest, suffered a stunning 65 percent decline.

Analysts had forecast the major oil companies would show third-quarter earnings drops ranging from 10 percent to 30 percent below year-earlier results because of weak demand that has spawned the world oil glut and driven down crude oil prices.

Mobil's profits sank to $323 million, or 78 cents a share, from $506 million, or $1.19 a share, a year earlier. Revenues fell 8 percent to $15.5 billion vs. $16.8 billion.

Mobil said all its worldwide businesses were affected by poor economic conditions and lower energy earnings reflected reduced profit margins, particularly in overseas markets.

Mobil also said the stronger U.S. dollar abroad boosted the cost of crude oil, which was not fully recovery in sales of products that are priced in foreign currencies.

Analysts had expected Mobil and the three other U.S. partners in the Arabian-American Oil Co., which produces the bulk of Saudi Arabia's oil, to report lower third-quarter earnings since Saudi crude is overpriced in the world market.

Exxon had a surprisingly modest 0.5 percent dip in third-quarter earnings and Standard Oil Co. of California a 13 percent decline. Texaco is the only Aramaco partner that has not yet announced its results.

Sun's profits fell to $152 million, or $1.28 a share, from $210 million, or $1.73 a share, in the third quarter last year. Revenues rose 3 percent to $3.8 billion vs. $3.7 billion.

Sun Chairman Theodore Burtis said lower U.S. exploration and production earnings were largely responsible for the decline.

Higher domestic gas prices partially offset these negative factors, he said.

Cities Service, now 45 percent owned by Occidental Petroleum Co., said its earnings sank to $25 million, or 33 cents a share, from $77.6 million, or 94 cents a share, in the 1981 third quarter. Revenues were up 3 percent to $1.97 billion vs. $1.92 billion.

Cities said its results were depressed by a $36 million increase in exploration costs and interest expense and a loss on the sale of tankers that reduced earnings by $21.4 million, or 28 cents a share.

Cities said its third-quarter results "should be viewed in the context of the preparation for the merger of the company with Occidental." Under the agreement, Cities plans to sell certain assets.

Superior Oil, the largest U.S. independent refiner, had a 54 percent plunge in third-quarter earnings to $37.4 million, or 30 cents a share, from $80.8 million, or 64 cents a share, a year earlier. The company said a dry hole drilled in Peru and losses by its mining affiliates contributed heavily to its poorer results. Revenues edged up to $499.8 million vs. $499.7 million.

Move up to high technology gas heating and lower your heating costs.

Improved efficiency will save you a significant amount of money on heating costs. With our finance program, you can have new, affordable high technology gas heating equipment installed for no money down... payments as low as $20.00 a month.

Recuperative Gas Furnace.
The recuperative furnace recycles hot flue gases, extracting the heat that otherwise is lost up the chimney. The chimney temperature of a conventional furnace is 450 degrees or higher. The chimney temperature of the new recuperative gas furnace is 200 degrees or less. That extra heat goes into your home, not up the chimney and you save money.

Pulse Combustion Gas Boiler.
This gas boiler is a revolutionary development in gas heating equipment. It will heat your home and hot water too. It has no pilot light. A spark plug is used for ignition on the initial cycle. The pulse combustion boiler has no burner and it needs no chimney because nearly all combustion heat stays in the boiler which lowers gas consumption significantly.

Heat Transfer Module and Water Tank.
Space age technology is responsible for this revolutionary system which will heat your home and hot water too. The heat transfer module is located outdoors, thereby eliminating the need for a chimney for the furnace or hot water tank. It circulates a hot water solution to the indoor blower coil for clean, comfortable heating and this system will heat your water at the same time.

Induced Draft Gas Furnace.
The improved efficiency of new gas heating equipment is dramatic. This model has an induced draft system which captures 150 degrees of extra heat that would normally be lost up the chimney in a conventional furnace. An induced draft furnace draws in air only at the burner. Heat and combustion products are pulled up through the heat exchanger for greater efficiency and more usable heat for the dollar.

Efficiency ratings are 30% to 50% greater. You'll save 25% to 35% on heating costs.

See a heating dealer or call us.

Who owes if someone reneges?

Universal Press Syndicate

When you contract to have services performed for you in the future for which you will pay in the future, who is responsible if you or the other party reneges for one reason or another?

In the past, a health studio could get your signature on a contract, sell it to a financing agency and go out of business — leaving you to pay, even though the services were no longer available.

Normally, the Federal Trade Commission's "Holder in Due Course Rule" would have prevented this — but today, the seller of future services may convince you to take out a loan on your own, pay for the services in advance — and then close. Some state laws protect you in such cases, but many of them are extremely fuzzy.

What if you are the one who changes your mind? You lost your job, the services are not what you expected, some other reason? If the seller had to invest in facilities and salaries to provide the services and cannot replace you, it only makes sense for you to be compelled to pay a hefty portion (or all) of the original charges.

In some cases, though, the seller can find a substitute for you — in, say, the example of a correspondence school. In a home study program, there are no fixed seats in a fixed class; a new student always can come in.

The goal is to protect both of you, not impose penalties. But the fact is that most consumers assume that if you sign a contract, you must pay what the paper says, no matter what. In ignorance, you fear risking a lawsuit or being tagged a bad credit risk. What, then, can you do?

• Protect yourself by checking with a consumer protection agency or someone you trust in any dispute. There may be a state law linking the amount of a dance lesson contract to, say, $1,000; if you signed for lifetime lessons at $10,000, you don't have to pay the $10,000.

This is merely the start of an attack on future service contracts to make them fair to both sides. Sellers should be able to recover legitimate costs. You, the consumer, should face payment of only actual losses — and certainly not if the company shuts down. It's another well-hidden scandal and rip-off.

• If fraud or a serious illegality occurred, complain to your state attorney general, state or local consumer protection agency, postal inspectors or U.S. attorney (under the mail-fraud statute).

• If you can afford a lawyer, have time to fight and are willing to risk putting your credit rating on the line, refuse to pay and fight in court.

Do not leave these vital questions to the unequal sophistication of consumers and sellers in signing documents, or to their unequal bargaining leverage in a dispute. Here is a fascinating untold story.

The FTC by the mid-'70s had proposed two rules in the future services area — one relating to vocational schools, the other to health spas. Both rules called for a maximum nonrefundable fee of $50 or 5 percent of the contract price, whichever was lower. Neither took into account any fixed costs the seller might have (fixed facilities, instructors, the rest).

This was souped-up consumerism to a ridiculous degree. Despite warnings that such a rule might be confiscatory, the FTC went ahead and adopted the vocational school rule in this form.

A highly prestigious, respected business school having actual classes chose to fight the FTC — and the school won. The court knocked out the rule. The FTC gave up on requiring any pro-rata refunds at all. No action ever has been taken on the health spa rule.

Since then, the bipartisan New York legislature (Republican Senate, Democratic Assembly) has moved into the gap between the all-embracing FTC rule and nothing — nothing being the option chosen at the federal level. The New York rule is limited to correspondence schools, which obviously have fewer fixed costs than schools with in-person classes.

New York law requires up to the $50 or 5 percent pro-rata refund of home study school tuition when the student drops out. If, say, you paid $1,000 for a 10-week course and you quit after five weeks, you might be entitled to a refund of $450. Other states now have New York's model to follow. The FTC won't act.

her roommate moved. Another woman recently was divorced, lost a couple of jobs, then her daughter became ill and she had no medical insurance.

Contrary to general belief, money is not at the top of the list of people's problems, Halleman said.

"Finances are an aftermath of what's happening. In surveys, finances always come in third or fourth."

Halleman blamed most financial problems on lack of communication and education.

"Budgeting isn't taught," Halleman said. "We're taught how to make money, but not how to spend it or how to get credit."

Halleman said many of MMC&S's clients are in their mid-20s to mid-30s "who came out of an era of 'Let's get all that Mom and Dad have.' So they got it all in 5 years what took Mom and Dad 10. The availability of credit 'helped' them on their way."

Halleman said attitudes may be changing.

"I feel the young people coming out of college now are different. In the coming years, you may see a little change. They're coming out in an age of inflation and rough economy so nothing is easy for them. They'll be in a learning process, whether they know it or not, that will change future generations."

Halleman said today's economy requires families to have two incomes to maintain a desired standard of living. In families where men don't want their wives to work, "There's no way out unless they really change their lifestyle."

The counseling service helps clients draft a flexible budget and teaches them how to use credit properly.

Halleman said if you find that 15 perpent of your income is owed for credit purchases, "you want to take a good look at what you're doing. If you reach 20 percent, you had better start pulling back and if you go at around 25 percent, you're really in trouble.

"Everybody should take time to look over their income and outgo in any type of budget, set short and interval goals as a family unit ... Learn to live with their income."

Record turnover for index futures

CHICAGO (UPI) — A record 36,677 contracts changed hands in the Chicago Mercantile Exchange's Standard and Poor's 500 Stock Index futures market Tuesday, up from the previous record of 28,416 traded Oct. 7.

Tuesday marked the fourth consecutive session in which S&P volume surpassed that of the exchange's U.S. Treasury bill futures contract, which normally is the CME's most actively traded market.

Analysts attributed the recent heavy S&P volume largely to the dramatic moves in the stock market.

Newsprint firm cuts prices

NEW YORK (UPI) — International Paper Co. said Wednesday it will cut newsprint prices 6 percent effective next Monday, becoming the second leading newsprint producer to join in the first major price cutback in recent history because of weak market conditions.

Bankruptcies run 50% over levels of '81

NEW YORK (UPI) — A surge of corporate bankruptcies has raised the number of business failures so far this year by almost 50 percent over 1981, Dun & Bradstreet Inc. reports.

Commercial and industrial failures for the week ended Oct. 21 climbed to 641 and pushed the total number of corporate bankruptcies in 1982 to 20,365 for a weekly average of 485, the credit service said Tuesday.

This year's business failures compare with only 13,659 — or 325 bankruptcies a week — in 1981 and represent a 49.1 percent rise, D&B said.

The number of corporate failures so far this year has eclipsed the 1933 total of 19,859 reported during the Great Depression.

D&B said, however, the 1982 failure rate is 86 per 10,000 companies against 100 per 10,000 businesses in 1933. But the failure rate has escalated since last year when 62 per 10,000 firms failed.

D&B also said the number of failures last week was more than double the 307 closings reported in the comparable 1981 week.

All types of operations experienced more failures and six of the nine major geographical regions studied showed increases.

Dear Abby

Girl's only flaw comes from closet

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am very proud of my youngest. She's wholesome, attractive, popular, and everything a mother could want in a daughter.

The problem? Her bedroom and bathroom are a total disaster area. This is no ordinary teen-age clutter. Jennie has not picked up a single piece of clothing for over four months, and she has a lot of clothes.

I have forgotten the color of her carpet, and sometimes wonder if the desk is still actually there underneath it all. When I complain, she hits me with this bit of blackmail:

"I don't smoke, I don't drink, I don't take drugs and I am not into sex yet. I'm college bound, so why can't I have this one little fault?"

Abby, her "one little fault" is driving me crazy, and I am not a picky housekeeper. I used to be flattered when she asked to wear my clothes. Now I find them on the floor of her room — when I can find them at all. Am I being unreasonable?

When I see and hear about kids her age who are all messed up, I wonder if I am wrong to ground her, plus no TV until she does something about her room. What about her $10 allowance and the use of my car? Help! The empty-nest syndrome sounds like one terrific idea to me.

— JENNIE'S MOM IN TUCSON

DEAR MOM: I would not ground Jennie, nor would I punish her by withholding her allowance or the use of your car. I would, however, refuse to let her wear my clothes.

Let her know that you are proud of her good behavior, then close her door and let her live in the clutter she created. When she's off to college, and her room is clean and quiet, write again and tell me how you feel.

DEAR ABBY: Many thanks for suggesting last year that parents buy an assortment of brightly colored pencils instead of the usual candy for trick-or-treaters. Knowing how much children like sweets, I bought some pencils halfheartedly, thinking that most children would prefer candy. I was wrong!

When I gave the kids their choice, all the pencils disappeared quickly, and I was left with the candy. My own children grumbled because there were no leftover pencils.

From now on, I am buying only pencils at Halloween. What a wonderful way to promote dental health and writing, and to save Mom from unnecessary Halloween calories.

— EILEEN L. IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR EILEEN: The idea wasn't mine. It came from a reader; I merely passed it on. But thanks for the opportunity to suggest it again.

DEAR ABBY: I have a suggestion for people who loan money to others and never get it back. Send them this poem:

"I think that I shall never see
"The dollar that I loaned to thee;
"A dollar that I could have spent
"On many forms of merriment.
"The one I loaned to you so gladly
"Is now the one I need so badly.
"For whose return I had great hope
"Just like an optimistic dope.
"For dollars loaned to folks like thee
"Are not returned to fools like me."

No solution for baldness

By LAWRENCE LAMB, M.D.
Newspaper Enterprise Association

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would like to know if the vitamins for hair that are being sold over the counter are effective in preventing hair loss.

I understand baldness is hereditary and can also occur if the hair is abused. My father is bald and my hair is thinning.

What can I do to prevent further hair loss? Will hair vitamins stop further loss and if not, what about aloe vera? I understand rubbing the plant juice on the scalp prevents hair loss.

DEAR READER — I see you are being exposed to something less than reliable health information. There is a lot of money in promising people that a substance will restore hair. Most such ads are completely without scientific basis.

You were right the first time about balding being hereditary. There are other causes, but male pattern baldness, which you are speaking about, is related to the type of testosterone (male hormone) actually produced by the individual hair follicle. You are born with follicles that produce it. And those follicles are usually at the front of the head, resulting in the typical male pattern baldness.

Now, the hair around the sides of the head usually does not produce this form of testosterone. So when you transplant the hair follicle even to the spot where you lost hair the transplanted follicle will continue to sprout hair. If the original hair loss was from something wrong in the area of the scalp, nutrition or body chemistry you would lose the transplant, too.

There are some new products being studied and there is more being learned about controlling how tissues form chemicals that may one day help in controlling male pattern baldness. Vitamins in hair products that you apply have no promise at all. There is no value in rubbing aloe vera on your scalp, except to the person who sells it to you.

Keeping your hair clean and not abusing it is the best that can be offered at the moment, short of hair transplants. I'm sending you The Health Letter 12-6, Hair Care, for more information. Others can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Three years ago my husband had a triple bypass operation at age 34. He never had a heart attack. He is doing fine. He watches his diet closely.

About eight months ago a doctor put him on nicotinic acid and increased it gradually to 3,000 mg a day. We would like to know if this is really helping him. His cholesterol level has dropped considerably. What kind of harm may come from taking such large doses of nicotinic acid?

DEAR READER — The Coronary Drug Project Research Group evaluated the effects of taking nicotinic acid in these amounts. It will lower cholesterol and may lower the risk of heart attacks. But they found it produced heart irregularities, including atrial fibrillation. It can also cause dyspepsia, diarrhea and even vomiting. It may cause jaundice and increase the incidence of acute gouty attacks.

It certainly can be used but should be used with caution. Since there are other medicines such as probucol available these might be used instead of nicotinic acid.

Many Viet kids left behind

HONG KONG (UPI) — She was crouched under a stone archway in Dalat, shivering in ragged, cotton pyjamas as a cold drizzle darkened the skies of Vietnam's Central Highlands.

Her big green eyes widened into a stare when the group of Westerners approached and she shrank timidly against the wall. She spoke no English but her face and her snarled brown hair told who she was and from whence she had come.

"Metise," cackled an old woman in French.

Metise, half-breed, GI bastard, Amerasian, dust child — there are many names in Vietnam for the children America left behind.

The little girls name was Mai and she is about 12, the old woman said after questioning the child in Vietnamese. Her mother had abandoned her there, in that same archway, four years before.

Shopkeepers in the market gave her food occasionally. Sometimes she begged. The small bundle of cloth beside her was her entire world.

As the old woman spoke, Mai bowed her head and began to sob.

A crowd was forming. Security police arrived and hustled the visitors away.

Mai is one of an estimated 20,000 children fathered by Americans in the 10,000 long days of the Vietnam War.

More than seven years after the war ended, the U.S. Congress voted to recognize them as the children of Americans and make them eligible to immigrate to the land of their fathers. The law awaits President Reagan's signature.

The new legislation is a giant step for many of these children.

Under the old law, they were condemned to remain in a land where they are vilified as the offspring of a still hated enemy — unless their fathers acknowledged paternity. And less than 100 fathers had.

But the new law is not as liberal as its sponsors boast.

When the Reagan signs it, no jumbo jets will line up to carry the youngsters "home to America" as many Americans seem to believe. Instead, they will join the "Orderly Departure Program" line that is already 30,000 people long. They must complete dozens of forms, apply for permits, undergo interviews and medicals.

U.S. officials working on the program privately admit they are pessimistic. The paperwork, they say, can take years. Before it can be completed, many of the boys will have reached draft age.

The 35 children who have left Vietnam since Sept. 30 were all acknowledged by their fathers and had been in the pipeline for years. Processing officials said they needed time to catch up on their paperwork before releasing more children.

Who will do the paperwork for Mai? And who will do it for Thuy?

Thuy, 14, lives on the streets of Ho Chi Minh City, once called Saigon, along with about 8,000 other GI urchins. She has no ration card, has never been to school and her home is a doorway on Tudo Street.

"Please try to help this girl, she have no mother, die long time," a woman who worries about Thuy and has three Amerasian kids of her own wrote UPI recently.

"She go out sell peanut and night time she stay outside. I afraid she try to make more money . . . She have no birth certificate. Can you find someone who want be her mother or her father? Please."

And who will do it for Billy Nguyen?

Billy is an 11-year-old American who stops Westerners on the streets of Saigon and standing ramrod straight, his arms at his sides, asks: "Excuse me, mam, do you know my father Stan from Wisconsin?"

Billy doesn't remember his father well but he does remember his dad's favorite song and delivers, to prove his heritage, a stanza of "Oh Susanna, dont you cry for me for I come from Alabama with my banjo on my knee."

Few of the Amerasians' mothers have papers and many are afraid to apply for exit permits because they are in Saigon illegally and fear being shipped to re-education camps or the dreaded "new economic zones" (work camps).

What most of them don't know yet is that the new law does not apply to mothers or sisters and brothers or grandmothers. The bill's sponsors insist that "other existing immigration statutes make provision for the mothers" but diplomats say the best the mothers can expect would be to follow "later, much later."

The chances that children like Mai, Thuy and Billy will get to America this year or next are slim indeed, U.S. officials say.

The chances that they'll never get there are high.

They, like thousands of other Amerasian waifs, will probably be left behind — once again.

Shrinks feel legal rap

No one in the medical profession seems to be safe from the threat of malpractice, and the American Bar Association Journal reports that more and more psychiatrists are feeling the legal sting from unhappy patients — and their families — these days.

More and more courtroom decisions are being handed down concerning cases in which a psychiatrist has been charged with failing to prevent self-inflicted injury, injury to another person, or even for inflicting injury himself.

No figures are available on the number of claims that have been filed, but the American Psychiatric Association, which has a professional liability program, reports that it is insuring three times as many psychiatrists now as it was in 1972.

Such cases, by the very nature of psychiatric treatment, are difficult to try, and the legal standard of care seems to be that of a "reasonable and prudent psychiatrist." In other words, whatever treatment was given must be accepted by a respectable professional authority.

Latest family thrill sport

Now you, too, can be an astronaut for a day. The latest "family thrill sport," which has just opened in Las Vegas, is designed to let you enjoy all the pleasures of zero gravity. It's called Flyaway, and though it's being touted as the "safest thrill sport of all time," it doesn't sound as if it were created for the faint of heart.

Here's how it works: First, you get a lesson in flight instruction, after which you don a flight suit, shoes and helmet. Then you are taken into a wind chamber, where you are turned loose to fly through the air with the greatest of ease — "no strings attached."

According to promoter Marvin Kratter, formerly involved with a number of posh hotels, the Flyaway structure is a padded, 54-foot-tall, silolike concrete cylinder 45 feet wide that generates a tunnel of air, internally propelled from its base by a DC-4 engine, providing wind velocities of up to 120 miles an hour.

Dallas verdict worries F&G officers

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — When a Canyon County jury slapped Claude Dallas' hands for killing William Pogue and Conley Elms, it opened the season on Fish and Game Department conservation officers.

Within 30 hours after the jury had found Dallas guilty of no more than voluntary manslaughter, three threats of physical harm had been hurled at conservation officers in the Boise area.

But more than that, the phone immediately began ringing with previously cited "sportsmen" calling the state headquarters to complain of officers' behavior and issuing of "nit-picking" citations.

That this is considered an onerous defeat for conservation enforcement has been understood by both sides. The hurt and confusion of this "lack of support" from the public still hung over the Boise state headquarters when the Fish and Game Commission conducted its quarterly meeting last Friday.

Commentary

Dale Baird, head of the department's enforcement arm, immediately has set up a series of sessions with personnel throughout the state with a two-pronged mission — to serve up justice with a smile and protect your back at all times. Additionally, Bob Salter, the department's assistant director who is headed for retirement next week after 35 years of service, has questioned whether Idaho needs the "nit-picking" type of regulations that "only serve to incite" the public and "do nothing for the resource."

Baird, distressed by the position his conservation officers now find themselves in, emphasized "the guys who have the attitude he doesn't like law enforcement are surfacing now." Salter called it latent "backlash" opened by the jury's decision.

On the bottom line, there was wondering of what happened to the "cop-killer" psychology that once was a strength of America's enforcement.

Idaho's conservation officers were extended "peace officer" status several years ago.

"The comments I hear now are incredible," Baird said, noting people caught breaking the law feel no remorse and simply vent their frustration on the officers. Baird said that isn't new. That it is human for an offender who is caught redhanded.

But he noted "our officers are human, too, and they respond to being called names. It is difficult to be called an —hole or chicken — by someone who has broken the law and not respond. But we have behavioral training. Except in the worst of situations, I would be surprised if our officers said a lot more than "shut up while I finish writing this citation," he said. "If we have these type of officers, it would be better to take (fire) those few and concentrate on the rest of them (behaviorally).

"This remains a real concern with me because we continue to get these kinds of comments."

Baird said he'd called the statewide meetings this week because "our officers and all our employees need assurances of legal state support and what kind of backing our personnel has in the field."

"The more stringent you make the regulations, the more violations you are going to have and the more reaction you are going to get," Baird told the commission.

On that same line, Salter said he had been putting together "a going-away list" of things he felt could be dropped, altered or added to improve the department. He noted enforcement had been part of that list.

"I think it would be good to review some of these regulations to see how important are some of these things we call illegal. I think a good example is the two-pole (fishing with more than one pole). You can mark one (a citation) up on the wall for the officer who makes the arrest but it does nothing for the resource.

"Another thing," Salter said "is this so-called quota system mentality. I wonder if the number of citations issued before you feel an officer is doing a good job is the good way to rate him."

Baird said the department currently is completing training of eight new conservation officers who will be spreading out across the state early next year. He said procedures in courteous apprehension will be re-evaluated and emphasized to the new troops.

Fourth District Commissioner Steve Herrett, Twin Falls, noted "you cannot arrest your own customer and make him like it" in response to suggestions that all citations be handed out with a smile.

"I would hate to be a new officer going out into the field now," Baird later said during a recess. "It has always been difficult (arresting violators) but one of the rewards is just being outdoors. But now there are so many more demands on our conservation officers (helping with management studies and surveys).

"When I started you could take a few minutes to teach a youngster to fly fish or sit down with some sportsmen and discuss the relation of management, enforcement and habitat. These days the officers are practically on a time table. An hour or two to check in this area and then off somewhere else to help with another project, then back to something else," he said, noting the day of the kind, friendly game warden has been lost to the expediency of the workaday world.

In particular, Baird said he most doubted the continuing refrain that when the conservation officer talked to the sportsmen he "had his coat pulled back over his hip and his hand on his pistol."

But as the rift between pseudo-sportsmen and enforcement widens into a chasm, it may become a self-preservation stance

It seems unbelieveable that anyone would expect a conservation officer to lay himself open to bodily harm or death by assuming a fetal position, simply because some slob hunter has killed three too many sage grouse.

Plan for walleye draws comments at public hearing

F&G looks for proper waters for sport fish

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

BOISE — Idaho's entry into the "cool water" species for fishing received the most attention at the Idaho Fish and Game Commission's public hearing in Boise last Friday.

The major topic of discussion centered around distribution of walleye perch throughout the state at the behest of midwestern and southern-raised transplanted Idaho anglers. Northern pike also received a vote for the Snake River and other waters, particularly from Colby Wheeler of Boise.

Only Richard Prang of Boise, representing the Boise Fly Fishermen, added a cautioning note expressing concern for the availability of trout and anadromous fisheries.

"Despite all the talk about these so-called cool or warm-water species, 90 percent of Idaho's fishermen still favor cold water fishing," he said.

Dave Ortmann, department biologist, presented a lengthy walleye study at the public hearing and highlighted its contents orally.

Ortmann said the department's survey largely centered on finding appropriate waters where walleye could improve fishing prospect. It weighed the addition of walleye — and its predaceous reputation — against populations existing in those waters, including food-base species.

Ortmann said the greatest risk of general plantings would be infestation throughout Idaho's major drainages and present a predator hazard to other sport species, particularly salmon and steelhead fry.

The commission also must weigh the possible sport fishing benefit of walleye against the enormous investments already made by state, private and federal interests to keep anadromous fish running into Idaho.

Walleye, Ortmann said, are native in a broad band beginning in the middle south and extending in a tapering band to the northern tip of the continent. Ideally, he said, the water temperatures are between that of warm water species and trout. Also, some turpidity is required since the construction of walleyes' eyes causes them to avoid light.

Walleye have been introduced by man in many areas and now are found in 42 states. The first walleye came to Idaho in 1974, being planted at Mud Lake, Salmon Falls Reservoir and Oneida Reservoir. The plantings "took" only in the latter two.

A size chart indicated that Salmon Falls Reservoir is ideal for the species since its documented growth rate there is greater than in any other Intermountain or Northwest impoundments. The Idaho record is seven pounds, 11 ounces.

Ortmann said unauthorized plantings are "rumored to have or are occuring," meaning private individuals are breaking state law by making illegal plantings in Idaho lakes and streams.

Ortmann said the Idaho survey concentrated on "closed" drainages where chance of escapement into the major rivers would be limited.

Among the final candidates suggested were Hauser, Twin and Spirt lakes in northern Idaho and Mud, Weston, Oakley, Salmon Falls and Oneida reservoirs in the south.

Ortmann pointed out it is impossible to expect Idaho's main stem of the Snake River at least will not become infested with walleye. He noted plantings in Oregon and Washington already have established populations in the lower Snake River as far up as Ice Harbor Dam.

"We think they will establish themselves throughout the system. It will be a slow process but it will occur," he said. Idaho's decision on whether to place walleye in open-end drainages would accelerate the range enlargement.

Ortmann said the department must "evaluate concurrently, stocking densities, food habits and growth, effect on other species and performance of fisheries already in place."

Washington revives egg take on Elwha River

Salmon so big that they scare you

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (UPI) — When you think of Elwha River salmon, think big.

The tiny river that cuts through Olympic National Park and empties into the Strait of Juan de Fuca about 10 miles west of Port Angeles produces monstrous fall chinook.

The hatchery record of 101 pounds was set many years ago, but an 80-pounder was reported just two years ago and 30-pound salmon are considered average.

Ed Jouper, manager of the Fisheries Department Elwha station, was handling the spawning chores when the 80-pound salmon was brought in.

"It was a big fish, they scare you at that size," he said during a recent interview. That day, the biggest salmon in a holding pond weighed about 40 pounds.

By the time a salmon completes its migration from the ocean to the Elwha station about 20 to 25 percent of its body weight has disappeared. Gone is the shiny silver color, replaced by black leathery skin and splotches of white where fungi have done their work.

The largest sport caught salmon in the Strait of Juan de Fuca this year was a 59-pound specimen taken in Freshwater Bay just off the mouth of the Elwha, and almost certainly part of the run from that river.

While all is well now and the egg take from the Elwha run will probably top three million this year, it was not always that way.

A combination of hydroelectric dams, silt and over-fishing threatened the fabled salmon with extinction in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

"The problem started with construction of two Crown Zellerbach dams on the river in the 1930s," Jouper said. "The dams shut off excellent spawning areas in the upper part of the river."

The first dam, where all salmon migration stops, is only four miles from the mouth of the river. The remaining 25 miles of stream are unusable for salmon propagation.

"The run just wasn't being supplemented and it was eventually fished down to a point of near extinction," Jouper said. "Not that many eggs were available and we were getting pretty darn close to losing the genetic stock."

He said only 70,000 salmon eggs a year were taken for hatchery purposes during the late 1960s. To put it in perspective, 70,000 eggs would barely fill two five gallon buckets.

This year the state Fisheries Department needs a pick-up truck just to haul the twice weekly Elwha River egg take.

When the run was at its lowest and

Canada geese — a big attraction for hunters

Special to The Times-News

There is probably no species which calls more loudly to the outdoorsman than the Canada goose.

Midnight honkers migrating against a full moon exert a pull on people to follow them north or south — whatever the season.

And as these great waterfowl settle on fields to feed or examine marshes and lakes for safe resting areas, hunters spend hours waiting on likely flyways against the hope of one shot.

Perhaps no other species of gamebird has become such an insurmountable trophy to those who have never successfully hunted them.

Yet, geese are bread-and-butter birds to those who know how to hunt them and who have the necessary equipment.

Although this fall's flight of migrating geese is expected to be slightly lower than last year because of nesting season storms last spring in Alberta, the estimated Rocky Mountain population stood at 71,000 birds last winter.

That's well above the U.S. and Canadian federal wildlife services' goal of maintaining the population above 50,000 geese.

Furthermore, our local geese had good conditions under which to raise young this year.

As a result, there will be plenty of temptation around for hunters this fall and winter.

Few hunters realize it, but Canada geese are increasing in numbers while ducks and other game birds are generally declining.

That's because geese have responded to management techniques and are being actively colonized on new lakes and ponds in the north.

Ducks and upland game birds have become the victims of shrinking habitat as agricultural, forest and range management practices dry up wetlands and destroy bird cover.

Looked at in that light, a couple dozen goose field decoys may not be a bad investment, if you learn to use them wisely.

Geese are very difficult to hunt through pass shooting and will seldom come into a spread of decoys on the water.

Probably it's because they've developed the survival tactic of looking over the surfaces below them for danger and varying their flights accordingly.

Goose decoys on the water are OK if you are hunting ducks. But building a blind that will fool geese on the water is an uphill struggle.

Most serious goose hunters plan to hunt feeding flights over decoys in stubble fields.

Over the years, hunters have developed the covered pit blind as the most effective method for hunting geese.

Early in the season, the most important thing about the blind is its location. Unless you're right where the birds fed the previous day, you may be wasting your time. Canadas are highly traditional birds which seldom venture into new feeding areas once the old one has proven safe.

Set your decoys up in small family groups, including at least one sentinel decoy with each group.

Geese always face into the wind and never come in near farm machinery, cars, trucks, houses and other man-containing things.

Later in the season, your pit blinds must be covered and camoflagued to prevent spooky birds from flaring away at the sight of an uncovered pit.

When it comes to digging a goose pit, perhaps the world's greatest invention is the pit board.

Usually constructed much like a picture frame, pit boards extend the hole upward from the pit.

When dirt from the hole is heaped up against the boards, they present the appearance of flatness from above.

Adding a pit cover and replanting stubble over the pit will complete the job.

While shooting, make sure that there are no dead geese lying belly-up in the set, no empty shotgun shells lying around, no frost on the decoys and no sign of movement from within the pit as the geese come in.

At the moment, Idaho's migrant geese are in Alberta, 1,000 to 3,000 miles due north of here.

Factors which will influence how long they stay in the north include weather and hunting pressure.

In fact, Albertans don't hunt geese on the water because it moves geese out and toward their wintering grounds.

Many rivers, such as the Oldman and the Belly, are closed to hunting birds to prevent early southern flights.

Later in the season however, the water will be opened to hunters with the idea of forcing the birds to migrate to southern points before a sub-arctic winter freezes them.

One group of geese, non-mating subadults, does not finish its northerly spring migration until fall, when it finishes the flight to Alberta and returns south with the rest of the flock.

Just remember that geese wise up on the trip south, as migrants have been exposed to pit blinds, vegetation field blinds, water sets of decoys and even goose-horses — an imitation horse which hides two hunters as they sneak up on resting or feeding geese.

Rules to survive by when you visit an Idaho tavern

Special to The Times-News

After 50 years plus of being an Idaho citizen, I've learned two rules of acceptable behavior in the local taverns.

First, never announce that you can master anyone present in pugilistic skills. Second, one should never admit to being an "environmentalist." Violation of either of these rules will most always place you in the emergency room.

No word is more misused today than environmentalist. It conjures up images of unwashed young kids with huge hiking boots, "ban the bomb" buttons and, of course, the image of high-priced eastern lawyers all standing in the way of progress.

In an attitude survey done in 1980, more than half of the people in the U.S. responded to the survey as being environmentalists.

I believe that nearly all of us are environmentalists, whether we know it or not. President Reagan has described Interior Secretary Watt as "... an environmentalist himself, as I think I am."

Perhaps the best definition of "environmentalist" is one who is actively concerned about the preservation of processes which make life possible on this planet. An environmentalist is not one who opposes the betterment of our lives or our standard of living.

Quite the opposite. An environmentalist is one who guards the very things that keep us alive today.

No! I won't arm wrestle you for it.

Each fall I hope for just one more nice weekend. Last weekend proved to be the weekend to explore the Jarbidge River.

My hike and fishing experience was devoted to that portion of the Jarbidge down river from Murphy's Hot Springs where the east and west forks meet.

From this merger the river flows into a canyon accessible only by walking.

There is a parking area near the merger of the two forks and a trail on the right side of the river that will take you into the canyon. It is a good trail for the first two miles where you will come upon a "sheep bridge."

My reason for going into this area in the late falls is snakes, of which ole partner is prone to crawl right up my back when sighted. The late fall weather puts these critters into hybernation.

Naw, you ain't going to catch any monster fish. Most will be four to eight inches long. But there seems to be something about catching just enough for lunch and stopping among the giant cedar trees to cook up a mess and keep going to see what is just around the next bend.

If you have never seen what many consider "native" trout, this is the place. They don't look like rainbow. They have beautiful rosette patterns along their sides and will hit a dry fly so hard your response will send them flying right into the brush behind you.

Of all the places for a beautiful fall hike for the whole family, this is the place.

My suggestion is to take your back packs with food and some water. Fishing gear should include the smallest flies you have — No. 12s to 16s. You can fish wet or dry.

Each pool will have fish and the kids can even sink a w[illegible]d come up with the day's noon meal.

The rock formations and the huge cedar trees will give scenic value to the hike. Please carry out all you take in and add any trash you may see in the area to your carryout load.

If you are real perky, you can hike to the sheep bridge before you start fishing. It is better that farther down the canyon you walk.

If snow hits Idaho early, some bird seasons may be cut

BOISE (UPI) — If snowy weather hits Idaho too soon this year, some bird hunting seasons might be shut down early because the already-scarce fowl will bunch together and provide easier targets for gunners, officials say.

Dick Norell, game bird manager for the Idaho Fish and Game Department, said unusually wet, cool spring weather trimmed most upland game populations — forcing managers to watch closely to prevent remaining birds from being decimated during the fall and winter hunting seasons.

The number of hunters and the rate of hunting success have dropped so far this year, Norell said Tuesday.

"Basically, everything is down," he said. "The sage grouse season is down from previous years, the huns and chukars down considerably and the pheasants are down."

Pheasant hunting in the panhandle over the opening weekend Saturday and Sunday was about normal, but hunter success and the number of hunters were off sharply in southern Idaho, Norell said.

He said 2,004 opening-weeked hunters were counted in southern Idaho fields, compared to 2,576 the year before. And the ratio of success in the area was .62 pheasants per hunter for the weekend, compared to .79 percent in 1981.

Norell said the decline in the number of pheasant hunters could be attributed at least in part to the opening of the Idaho deer hunting season only a few days before the pheasant opener.

The skimpy fowl populations this year mean early closures in the chukar and hun seasons could be ordered and the first pheasant hen hunt scheduled in Idaho for several years could be canceled.

"We had a wet, cold spring, and that really hurts production," Norell said. "The chick survival rate was very poor."

Norell said if the birds could be protected from excessive hunting pressure for the rest of the year, many of the reduced populations likely would rebound quickly next spring.

State fish and game commissioners probably will make a decision Nov. 5 on whether to go ahead with the pheasant hen season, Norell said.

The hun and chukar seasons began Sept. 18 and are scheduled to continue through Dec. 31 in most of the state and through Jan. 16 in the Hells Canyon area.

"I would be very surprised if the chukar and hun seasons went the full length," Norell said.

Hunting fowl in downpour makes coming home great

By SAM COOK
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

DULUTH, Minn. — If we had known 2½ inches of rain were going to fall that day, we probably wouldn't have gone.

We've never minded sitting in a little rain to hunt ducks, but this was a real frog-strangler. It wasn't like we were caught unaware. When we left town at 4:30 a.m., the rain was coming down in sheets, riding an angry northeast wind.

From the warmth of Mike Furtman's four-wheel drive truck, we watched the rain pelt the highway.

"It's really coming down, isn't it?" said Furtman's brother-in-law, Bill Pearce, of Milwaukee.

For Pearce, 28, it was his first duck-hunting trip. He and Furtman had been out a couple of times since opening day. Both of those days had been Indian summery, though. Pearce must have wondered what he'd gotten himself into on this miserable morning.

It was the three of us — Furtman, Pearce and myself — humming along the highway. Plus Gypsy, Furtman's Labrador retriever, already wet from an early-morning sashay at home. Up front, Furtman and Pearce each had stoked up their pipes. The sweet smell of pipe smoke mingled with the essence of wet dog to create an atmosphere that only hunters can appreciate.

We slid down a greasy logging road, crossing swollen rivulets that seemed proud of their new-found current. Finally, the headlight beams found the permanent puddle we were looking for, and Furtman shut the truck off.

There was no choice but to get out.

The water was already an inch deep in the low end of the canoe by the time we'd loaded two dozen decoys, three shotguns and our duffels into it. Furtman was describing how the rain had felt trickling down his arms all the way to his armpits as he took the canoe off the truck.

Scanning the cattailed shore with a flashlight, we found a spot to pull the canoe up. The howling northeaster would be at our backs, the better for ducks to set into our decoys. We pitched the decoys in two groups of a dozen each, then pulled the canoe into the reeds.

The sky was turning from black to charcoal as we strung up camouflage netting, arranged our gear and made sure each of us had a good shooting alley. Furtman tied up one corner of the netting so Gypsy would be able to see any ducks we knocked down.

Waiting for shooting light, we poured hot chocolate and coffee. We tried to drink the liquid somewhere in that never-never land between tongue-burning-hot and too-late-it's-lukewarm.

Then we sat.

And waited.

Rain smacked the back of parka hoods. It ran down sleeves and onto bare hands. It dripped onto glasses and noses.

The rain ran down gun barrels and beaded up on gunstocks. It soaked into Gypsy's black fur. It collected in the bottom of the canoe, mostly at Furtman's end, where Gypsy's extra weight made the canoe sit lower.

Morning came as it by default. It wasn't so much that the day had dawned as it was that the night had simply dissolved.

It's hard to say how long we sat

Charles Johnson, head of costal hatchery operations for the Washington Fisheries Department, holds a battered but very valuable 40-pound Elwha River fall chinook salmon

State land board policies may delay salmon hatchery

BOISE — A matter of "policy" is threatening the early operation of the proposed Sawtooth Chinook Salmon eyeing and rearing facility on Decker Flats near Stanley.

Idaho Land Board officials' "policy" could prevent construction beginning on the facility next spring. In fact, some interestest contractors already have visited the site this fall.

The snafu, as explained to the Idaho Fish and Game Commission at its quarterly meeting, disrupts some inter-agency plans designed to allow bid letting later this fall.

The land in question is owned by the state although the project is part of the federally-funded anadromous mitigation project being administered by the Army Corps of Engineers.

The original plan called for the State Land Board to sell the site to the Idaho Fish and Game Department for $274,000. It in turn would be reimbursed by the corps.

However, Jerry Evans, representing the land board, said due to pressures from other interests and on other land matters, the best policy to follow would be "public auction." This would allow any vested interests equal opportunity to purchase the land and free the board for post-disbursal criticism.

However, Evans agreed in this case, a land swap would work as effectively.

Adding urgency to the site acquisition is the funding requirements underwhich the corps labors. The money for the site is included in this year's $6 million budget. If it isn't used during that period, the money reverts to the general fund and new legislation would be required to include the site fee in another year's budget.

On the matter of land swaps, the commission voted to offer a portion of 125 surplus acres at the Post Falls game farm for the Sawtooth land.

Commissioner Pete Thompson said North Idaho sportsmen would undoubtedly go along with the swap since the Post Fall land is considered surplus by them.

"I don't think there would be any problem if we show this need," he said.

Commissioner Dick Schwarz of Idaho Falls noted "knowing the vagaries of federal financing, I think we should go ahead."

The commission further stipulated that the money received from the corps would be used to secure desireable access sites in Northern Idaho.

Salmon

money was desperately needed to turn it around, the salmon found an unlikely ally in John L. Sullivan, an old pro among legislative lobbyists, with a soft spot in his heart for the Elwha.

During his many years of lobbying, Sullivan was hired by interests as varied as horse racing, garbage haulers, and optometrists.

But he took on the Elwha salmon as a labor of love, with no charge to anyone.

Sullivan's first, and probably most important move, was to enlist the aid of Sen. Martin J. Durkan of Issaquah, who at the time ran the budget-writing Ways and Means Committee with an iron hand.

Even with his political clout, Durkan had a hard time coming up with money for the Elwha.

"Nobody wanted it when it came up in 1969, even the Fisheries Department was against it at first," he said in an interview. "People were calling it a boondoggle and worse."

Efforts to raise money for the Elwha station were hampered by a sour state economy largely brought on by the so-called Boeing Recession. Undeterred by the situation, Sullivan and Durkan kept at it until lawmakers provided the construction money in 1973.

"Sully really saved the fish," Durkan said of the lobbyist who died several years ago. "I'm sure he would smile now if he could see how well things have turned out."

Also more than pleased with the way matters have proceeded since the $500,000 became available is state Fisheries Director Rolland Schmitten.

"I just sit back and smile when I think about it," Schmitten responded when asked to evaluate the Elwha River turnaround. It was a prior administration that initially opposed the project, which Schmitten strongly supports.

"What can you say about a program that is doing everything that anyone could possibly even hope for," he said.

A key to the salmon resurgence was construction of a 1,400-foot long rearing pond near the river. Crown Zellerbach Corp., which owns and operates the Elwha dams, helped the state construct the facility and contributes about one-third of the annual $100,000 in operating costs.

The pond is capable of holding three million young salmon. The fish are held until they are yearlings to "imprint" them with river smells so they can find their way home after migrating to the ocean.

While no one knows for sure why one particular run has consistently produced giant salmon, Jouper said migration habits may play a significant role. In addition to being a genetically superior strain, the Elwha salmon spend up to seven years at sea, growing all the time.

Traditionally, salmon spend only three or four years in salt water.

Once back in their native stream, the Elwha salmon are collected either from a holding pond near the rearing pond or by gaffing them from shallow riffles in the river. Jouper is a master of the 20-foot long gaff pole and has snagged 17 fish in a row without a miss.

Salmon eggs and sperm collected at the Elwha are immediately transferred to Fisheries Department's Soleduck hatchery about 45 miles away.

The eggs are fertilized and incubated there and the young salmon are held for several months until they are returned to the Elwha rearing pond to await release.

Pheasant season opens to 'just fair' acclaim by critics

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News wirter

JEROME — "Fair" is the official tag Gary Will of the Idaho Fish and Game Department had hung on the 1982 pheasant season.

Will, regional biologist, said a combination of a harsh winter and lousy hatching and rearing weather conditions this spring contrived to bring pheasant harvest to an eight-year low. But even fair has a much better sound to it than what was expected late last winter after several weeks of biting cold and heavy snow cover that had the threat of taking the area completely out of the pheasant hunting business.

"But that doesn't mean there aren't birds out there for the dedicated hunter who is willing to put in some hours in the field," said Will.

Will said he hesitated to put such a critical tag on this year's hunt, mostly because "it follows eight straight years of increased hunter success" that peaked with the best season in over 10 years.

The department again opened only the Acequia checking station, which serves the best production range in Magic Valley.

In the two days of operation there, the department checked 625 hunters with 534 birds and a .85 birds per man. "We have not processed the hours-per-bird ratio yet but I'm sure it's going to be substantially higher than last year," Will said.

Those figures compare to the 1981 report of 632 hunters with 795 pheasants and 1.26 birds per hunter. Last year it took about 2.58 hours of hunting to produce one pheasant.

At the same time, Will conducted extensive field checks in the North Rupert area. Saturday he counted 130 hunters with 99 birds for a .76 bird per man. Sunday, in the same area, he had 106 hunters with 62 birds and .58 birds per man.

"It probably is important here to note that these hunters were not finished and were still in the field so success wouldn't indicate the check-station figures," Will said.

The checking station figures also compare other things, including the participation of non-resident hunters.

That this wasn't going to be a banner year for phesants clearly was imprinted on Idahoans. This year 81 per cent of those afield in the checking area were from Idaho. Of the 19 per cent non-residents, Nevada had the largest component with nine per cent while Utah and California accounted for 3.5 per cent each. The remainder comprised a scattering from adjacent states, Will said.

A year ago, 89 per cent of the hunters were Idahoans and just 11 per cent were non-residents.

The number of non-residents has fluctuated greatly, ranging in last year's low of 11 per cent to a 1974 high of 28 per cent.

Several things conspired to pull the non-resident percentage down. In 1974, the hunter success was down to .7 birds per hunter, discouraging to out-of-staters who have to pay the premium dollar for the right to participate.

While the success percentage has increased each fall since then, to last year's high, the non-residents haven't returned in such great numbers.

In addition, Idaho's more restrictive opening five-day bag and possession limits have whittled into out-of-state participation.

The current season allows for two roosters and no more than four in possession during the first five days. But starting tomorrow, the daily limit goes to three and the possession limit to six (roosters) and that is a great enducement to non-residents.

Will noted that out-of-staters come to Idaho expressively to hunt and therefore don't mind putting in the extra hours.

A third major factor this year, for both Idaho and out-of-state residents was the dovetailing of several hunt openings with the pheasant season.

"Our Idaho hunters had some hard choices to make," Will said. "This is the first time that the deer season has corresponded with the pheasant opener and we also had the goose season open Saturday in this area. All of it combined to reduce the usual opening day pressure we would expect if they had fallen on separate weekends."

Utah hunters also faced the choice since the Utah deer season opened Saturday.

"Generally, hunting pressure was down some on Saturday, based on our previous opening day statistics," Will said. "Sunday the pressure was down substantially."

In summarizing his opinion of the season, Will said "just fair, because last year was the best we've had as far as birds per hunter and the numbers of hunters participating since the early 1970s. In 1974, at Acequia, we counted .7 birds per hunter and it took them nearly four hours per harvest. In 1975 the success was .61 birds and 5.8 hours. Since then it has been increasing in success to the 1981 peak."

Will said he was more inclined to blame the wet, cold spring than the harsh winter.

"Even though the winter was hard, the number of birds surviving was fairly good against expectations. It was this spring's production that had the greatest impact — cool, wet weather that reduced chick survival — more than anything else," he said.

Across the region, Will estimated success down from 25 to 50 per cent, depending on the area. "It was fairly spotty. We found some parties that got their birds in the first hour or two and others that hunted all day and didn't get anything or one or two for the group."

Because the pheasant and deer seasons opened concurrently, the department was able to pick up additional data from bird hunters that funnelled through the Oakley check station.

In that area, some 82 hunters took 61 birds for a .74 bird per hunter success.

Deer hunts successes up sharply

JEROME — A sharp increase in success greeted deer hunters who took part in the controlled hunts along Magic Valley's southern rim of mountains.

Four checking stations, draining the management units of 54, 55 and 56, turned up a total of 1,552 hunters with 631 deer and a 40.6 per cent success factor. This compared to 1980's totals of 2,130 hunters with 647 deer and 30.3 per cent success.

Gary Will, biologist for the Idaho Fish and Game Department, said hunters should jump to any major conclusions about that sharp increase. He noted the amount of permits in the either-sex divisions of the seasons had been reduced by 33 per cent and this reflected a 27 percent reduction in hunting pressure in the field.

Last year the department allowed 2,700 permits for either sex hunting in Units 54 and 55 and those were reduced to 1,800 this fall. However, most of those permits will be returned to the public in the form of permits for "bucks-only" seasons that open in the same areas Saturday.

"Overall success was up about 10 percent which we feel is excellent hunting success," Will said. "Almost all the hunters reported seeing fairly good numbers of deer. The reasons that some didn't have any (kills) was because they missed their shots."

"Weather conditions were almost idea for hunting. It was fairly moist in the forest and access was good."

The harvest by checking station, compared with the figures gathered at the same sites in 1980 (the department did not gather check station figures last year) include:

Albion (Unit 55, controlled either sex) — 471 hunters with 182 deer and 38.6 percent success. 1980—645 hunters with 161 deer and 24.9 success.

Oakley (Units 54 and 55) — 325 hunters with 137 deer and 42.2 percent success; 1980 — 371 hunters with 137 deer and 36.9 success.

Rock Creek (Unit 54) — 379 hunters with 139 deer and 36.7 percent success; 1980 — 603 hunters with 192 deer and 31.8 percent success.

Shoshone Basin (Unit 54) — 377 hunters with 173 deer and 45.8 percent success; 1980 — 511 hunters with 157 deer and 30.7 percent success.

Maine forces oppose moose hunts

AUGUSTA, Maine (UPI) — More than 40,000 people have signed petitions to stop Maine's fall moose hunt, apparently more than enough to force a statewide vote on the issue, organizers say.

John N. Cole, leader of the group called Save Maine's Only Official State Animal, filed 39,000 of the signatures Monday with the secretary of state's office. He said another 2,000 signatures are being processed for submission.

"We aren't anti-hunting, pro gun-control, vegetarians or any of those other things," Cole said. "I am myself a hunter, but I don't see it as much of a hunt to kill something as big as a beer truck that doesn't try to hide or attack."

David Allen, executive director of the Sportsman's Alliance of Maine, said, "The sportsmen of the state will be well-organized and will do everything we have to do to see that that referendum is defeated."

State law requires that people trying to initiate statewide referendums gather at least 37,026 signatures of registered voters — 10 percent of the total number of votes cast in the last gubernatorial election.

Ducks

before we saw the pintails. A long time. The ducks materialized over the south end of the lake, heading our way, but high.

Furtman gave them a highball on his duck call. Nobody moved. They came right over us, still high, and swung back. Furtman bleated on the call. The pintails — maybe 25 of them — turned.

They were headed back our way, lower now, but not like they were going to come in. A couple of them side-slipped for a better look. But the flock rose and went over high again.

Furtman bleated. The ducks swung, rode the wind down the lake and kept on going.

"Dammit," Furtman said; and the rain kept falling.

Furtman tucked his call back inside his jacket. He unscrewed the cup from the top of his thermos and started bailing the water he and Gypsy were sitting in.

The hours passed slowly. Even the rain got tired of falling after awhile. Occasionally, one of us would stand for a few minutes to let the blood re-enter our legs below the knees. Some cookies were eaten, and later some sandwiches.

At some point in the timeless morning, Furtman was trying to keep Gypsy interested by whispering "Ducks!" to her. I was doing my part by making a small quacking noise, a thing I'd discovered I could do back in junior high school and hadn't had a chance to use much in recent years. Pearce was watching.

That's when the ring-necked duck buzzed our decoys well within shooting range. Pearce noticed it first, but the bird was gone before any of us could get our guns up. It was giving us no second chances.

Furtman and I looked at each other sheepishly. Gypsy's look at Furtman was not as forgiving.

A few days later that same morning, a nice bunch of mallards gave the lake a cursory glance on their way south and east of us. They never considered stopping.

At 11:30, we decided to give the hunt another half-hour. It was kind of a duck hunter's version of "One more cast." With the same result.

We picked up decoys and made for the truck. With the windshield wipers slapping time and the heater churning out warmth, we headed home.

Pipe smoke and a wet dog never smelled so good.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

Eight amendments to the Idaho Constitution will appear on the general election ballot. These have been proposed to the people for ratification following action by the legislature.

The amendment proposals, the Legislative Council's statements of meaning and purpose, and the statements for and against are listed as follows:

H.J.R. No. 2

Section 6, Article V, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is amended to read as follows:

SECTION 6. SUPREME COURT — NUMBER OF JUSTICES — TERM OF OFFICE — CALLING OF DISTRICT JUDGE TO SIT WITH COURT. The Supreme Court shall consist of five justices, a majority of whom shall be necessary to make a quorum or pronounce a decision. If a justice of the Supreme Court shall be disqualified from sitting in a cause before said court, or be absent due to sickness or therein, by reason of illness or absence, the said court may call a district judge to sit in said court on the hearing of such cause.

The justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large. The terms of office of the justices of the Supreme Court, except as in this article otherwise provided, shall be six years.

The justices of the Supreme Court shall, immediately after the first election under this constitution, be classified by lot, so that one shall hold his office for the term of two years, one for the term of four years, and one for the term of six years. The lots shall be drawn by the justices of the Supreme Court, who shall, for that purpose, assemble at the seat of government, and they shall cause the result thereof to be certified to by the secretary of state, and filed in his office. ~~The justice having the shortest term to serve, not holding his office by appointment or election to fill a vacancy, shall be chief justice, and so on, as to all terms of the Supreme Court, and, in case of his absence, the justice having in like manner the next shortest term to serve shall act as chief justice.~~

The chief justice shall be selected from among the justices of the Supreme Court by a majority vote of the justices. His term of office shall be four years. When a vacancy in the office of chief justice occurs, a chief justice shall be selected for a full four year term. The chief justice shall be the executive head of the judicial system.

The question to be submitted to the electors of the State of Idaho at the next general election shall be as follows:

"Shall Section 6, Article V, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended to provide for the selection of ten chief justices, who shall be the executive head of the judicial system, from among the justices of the Supreme Court by majority vote for a term of four years?"

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S STATEMENT OF MEANING AND PURPOSE

H.J.R. No. 2

Meaning and Purpose

The purpose of this proposed amendment to Section 6, Article V, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to provide that the Chief Justice of the Idaho Supreme Court be selected by and from the justices of the Supreme Court for a term of four years.

Effect of Adoption

If this amendment is adopted, the method for choosing the Chief Justice of the Idaho Supreme Court will change. All justices of the Supreme Court will continue to be elected by the people for six year terms. At present, the elected justice with the shortest time to serve is automatically the Chief Justice. This requirement causes very short terms as Chief Justice, as there have been eight Chief Justices in the past nine years. This new provision will allow the five justices to select one justice to serve as Chief Justice for a four year term.

Statements FOR

the Proposed Amendment

1. By providing a definite, fixed term of office for the Chief Justice, this amendment will ensure consistent, stable leadership for the entire judicial system, which is administered by the Supreme Court and the Chief Justice.

2. This amendment will structure the administration of the judicial system in a manner similar to that of the executive branch of government, in that each will be headed by an officer holding his office for a four year term.

3. This amendment will provide a means for having a Chief Justice who is skilled in administrative matters as recognized by his associates, rather than requiring the justice with the shortest remaining term to function as the Chief Justice, regardless of whether he wants the position.

4. This amendment will not increase the cost of the judicial branch of state government; in fact, it should tend to keep the costs of government under much tighter control, since a single, consistent policy of administration can be implemented and maintained during a four year term.

Statements AGAINST

the Proposed Amendment

1. There is no need to change the method for selecting the Chief Justice. The present system has served very well since Statehood, and has kept the judicial system on an even course.

2. The judicial system need not be organized like the executive departments, since the courts serve an entirely different purpose.

3. Judges and justices should not be too tightly bound by an administrative network under the direction of a permanent Chief Justice; the judges need to be impartial and reasonably independent as they decide the people's business in the courts.

H.J.R. No. 7

Section 3, Article VI, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is amended to read as follows:

SECTION 3. DISQUALIFICATION OF CERTAIN PERSONS. No person is permitted to vote, serve as a juror, or hold any civil office who is under guardianship, ~~of unsound mind,~~ or who has, at any place, been convicted of ~~treason, a felony, embezzlement of public funds, bartering or selling, or offering to barter or sell his vote, or purchasing or offering to purchase the vote of another, or other infamous crime,~~ and who has not been restored to the rights of citizenship, or who, at the time of such election, is confined in prison on conviction of a criminal offense, or who is a bigamist or polygamist, or is living in what is known as ~~patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or in violation of any law of this state, or of the United States, forbidding any such crime, or who, in any manner, teaches, advises, counsels, aids, encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law, or to commit any such crime, or who is a member of, or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of, any order, organization, association, corporation, or society which teaches, advises, counsels, encourages, or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal or plural marriage, or which teaches, or advises that the laws of this state prescribing rules of civil conduct, are not the supreme law of the state.~~

The question to be submitted to the electors of the state of Idaho at the next general election shall be as follows:

"Shall Section 3, Article VI of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended to eliminate obsolete references to the disqualification from voting, serving as jurors, and holding civil office of persons who are idiotic or insane, of persons who commit specified offenses, and of persons living in or advocating celestial or patriarchal marriage?"

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S STATEMENT OF MEANING AND PURPOSE

H.J.R. No. 7

Meaning and Purpose

The purpose of this proposed amendment to Section 3, Article VI, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to remove certain language relating to disqualifications to vote, serve as a juror, and hold civil office.

These disqualifications are applied to:

(1) idiotic and insane persons;
(2) persons who have been convicted of specified crimes including treason, embezzlement of public funds, bartering or selling or offering to barter or sell one's vote, purchasing the vote of another, bigamy or polygamy, or other infamous crimes; and
(3) persons who practice or advocate celestial or patriarchal marriage.

Effect of Adoption

If this amendment is adopted, persons who have been convicted of a felony and have not had citizenship rights restored, or persons who are confined in prison on conviction of a criminal offense, will continue to be disqualified from voting, from serving on a jury, and from holding civil office. Crimes which will constitute felonies will be specified by law. The reference to persons living in or advocating celestial or patriarchal marriage will be eliminated. The reference to persons who are idiotic or insane will be eliminated.

Statements FOR

the Proposed Amendment

1. This amendment will eliminate language from the Idaho Constitution which is clearly archaic, redundant and in some cases discriminatory.

2. The crimes listed separately for disqualification to vote are felonies as established by law and need not be singled out by this section of the Constitution.

3. The disqualification of the idiotic and insane calls for a judgment by election officials which they are probably not qualified to make.

4. Reference to persons living in or advocating celestial or patriarchal marriage should be eliminated from the Constitution, since it is a statement of religious discrimination and an insult to a large number of the State's citizens. The prohibition against such persons voting, serving as jurors, or holding civil office has not been and probably could not be enforced in light of other federal and state constitutional guarantees of religious freedom. The reference to bigamy and polygamy, which are felonies under present law, should be eliminated since the reference is redundant.

Statements AGAINST

the Proposed Amendment

1. This proposed amendment will not change the current administration of the election laws nor the rights of individuals as citizens. Although some of the language may be archaic, it is not causing any harm and doesn't require tampering with at this time.

H.J.R. No 14

Section 2, Article VI, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is amended to read as follows:

SECTION 2. QUALIFICATIONS OF ELECTORS. Except as in this article otherwise provided, every male or female citizen of the United States, twenty-one eighteen years old, who has actually resided in this state or territory for six months, and in the county where he or she offers to vote, ~~thirty days~~ immediately preceding the day of election for the period of time provided by law, if registered as provided by law, is a qualified elector; ~~provided, however, that every citizen of the United States, twenty-one years old, who has actually resided in this state for sixty days next preceding the day of election, if registered as required by law, is a qualified elector for the sole purpose of voting for presidential electors; and until otherwise provided by the legislature, women who have the qualifications prescribed in this article may vote at school elections and hold offices and vote at such school elections as provided by the laws of Idaho territory.~~

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S STATEMENT OF MEANING AND PURPOSE

H.J.R. No. 14

Meaning and Purpose

The purpose of this proposed amendment to Section 2, Article VI, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to make voting age and residency requirements consistent with both provisions of the United States Constitution and with recent United States Supreme Court decisions, and to give the Legislature authority to set residency requirements for voting purposes.

Effect of Adoption

If this amendment is adopted, Section 2, Article VI, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho will conform with controlling federal constitutional law. Because the federal constitutional law is already in effect, the updating of Section 2, Article VI for conformance will have no real effect on the laws currently in force in Idaho. This amendment will change the voting age from 21 to 18 years of age to conform with the 26th amendment to the United States Constitution, remove residency requirements, and remove limitations on women's rights to hold office and vote. This amendment would give the Legislature authority to set residency requirements by statute.

Statements FOR

the Proposed Amendment

1. This amendment will change the voting age from 21 to 18 years of age. The amendment will, therefore, bring the Constitution of the State of Idaho up to date regarding voting age law.

2. The United States Supreme Court has declared residency requirements of more than 30 days unconstitutional. This amendment will remove such unconstitutional residency requirements from Idaho's Constitution.

3. This amendment will give the Legislature authority to set residency requirements by statute. This will make it possible to change a residency requirement without going through the costly, cumbersome and lengthy constitutional amendment process.

4. This amendment will remove antiquated and patently unconstitutional language restricting women's rights to hold office and to vote.

Statements AGAINST

the Proposed Amendment

1. This proposed amendment will remove the constitutional residency provision and give the Legislature the power to set residency requirements by statute. This grant of authority clearly conflicts with the specific intent of the constitutional drafters who intended that residency periods be set by constitutional provision.

H.J.R No. 17

Article VIII, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is amended by the addition of a NEW SECTION, to be known and designated as Section 5, Article VIII, and to read as follows:

SECTION 5. SPECIAL REVENUE FINANCING. The legislature may enact laws authorizing the creation of public corporations by counties or cities to issue nonrecourse revenue bonds or other nonrecourse revenue obligations and to apply the proceeds thereof in the manner and for the purposes heretofore or hereafter authorized by law, subject to the following limitations:

Nonrecourse revenue bonds and other nonrecourse revenue obligations issued pursuant to this section shall be payable only from money or other property received as a result of projects financed by the nonrecourse revenue bonds or other nonrecourse revenue obligations and from money or other property received from private sources.

Nonrecourse revenue bonds and other nonrecourse revenue obligations issued pursuant to this section shall not be payable from or secured by any tax funds or governmental revenue or by all or part of the faith and credit of the state or any political subdivisions.

Nonrecourse revenue bonds or other nonrecourse revenue obligations issued pursuant to this section may be issued only if the issuer certifies that it reasonably believes that the interest paid on the bonds or obligations will be exempt from income taxation by the federal government.

Nonrecourse revenue bonds or other nonrecourse revenue obligations may only be used to finance industrial development facilities consisting of manufacturing, processing, production, assembly, warehousing, solid waste disposal, recreation and energy facilities, excluding facilities to transmit, distribute or produce electrical energy.

The counties or cities shall never exercise those governmental attributes of sovereignty including, but not limited to, the power to tax, the power of eminent domain, and the police power on behalf of any industrial development project authorized pursuant to this section.

Sections 2, 3 and 4 of Article VIII shall not be construed as a limitation upon the authority granted in this section. The proceeds of revenue bonds and other revenue obligations issued pursuant to this section for the purpose of financing privately owned or operating facilities of private persons or corporations shall be subject to audit by the state but shall not otherwise be deemed to be public money or public property for purposes of this constitution. This section is supplemental to and shall not be construed as a repeal of or limitation on any other authority lawfully exercised under the constitution and laws of this state, including, among others, any existing authority to issue revenue bonds.

The question to be submitted to the electors of the State of Idaho at the next general election shall be as follows:

"Shall Article VIII of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended by the addition of a new Section 5, to grant to the legislature the power to authorize counties or cities the right to issue nonrecourse revenue bonds to be used only to finance industrial development projects limited to manufacturing, processing, production, assembly, warehousing, solid waste disposal, recreation and energy facilities, excluding facilities to transmit, distribute, or produce electrical energy; provided, that such revenue bonds shall be payable from revenue derived from the industrial developments financed thereby and shall not be secured by the full faith and credit of the taxing power of the state or any other political subdivision; and provided that no political entity shall exercise in any way those powers for the benefit of any such industrial development?"

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S STATEMENT OF MEANING AND PURPOSE

H.J.R. No 17

Meaning and Purpose

The purpose of this proposed amendment to Article VIII, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to authorize the Legislature to enact laws to give counties or cities the power to create public corporations to issue industrial revenue bonds for certain types of businesses and industries.

Effect of Adoption

If this amendment is adopted, the Legislature will be able to enact laws authorizing the creation of public corporations by counties or cities for the purpose of issuing nonrecourse industrial revenue bonds. These bonds could be used to finance limited types of industrial facilities including manufacturing, processing, production, assembly, warehousing, solid waste disposal, recreation and energy facilities, but excluding facilities to transmit, distribute or produce electrical energy. The bonds issued pursuant to this amendment will be paid off entirely from revenue derived from the industrial projects financed by the bonds. The bond debt will not be payable from, or secured by, tax funds or general government revenues, and will not be secured in any way by the full faith and credit of the State of Idaho or any subdivision of the State. The 1982 Legislature passed legislation authorizing the cities or counties to create public corporations, however, that legislation will become law only if this amendment is approved by the voters.

Statements FOR

the Proposed Amendment

1. Because the interest payments from industrial revenue bonds are tax free, the interest rate offered to investors to achieve marketability will be lower than on conventional bonds. This will result in lower interest expense to the business entity and improve profit margins which will in turn encourage investment in new businesses, plants and equipment, and create jobs for Idahoans.

2. Idaho is currently the only state that does not allow some form of general purpose industrial revenue bonding. The lack of such bonding places Idaho at a competitive disadvantage as compared with other states, when trying to recruit new business and industry.

3. Provisions in this amendment restrict the types of industrial projects which may qualify for industrial revenue bonding. This will help Idaho avoid the abuses and excesses which have occurred in other states.

4. The types of industries qualified to receive funds raised by the sale of industrial revenue bonds are labor intensive and the maximum number of new jobs for Idahoans.

5. Idahoans, at the local level, can exert influence over the type and size of industry locating in their area through the use of industrial revenue bonds.

6. The issuance of a revenue bond by a public corporation created by a city or county does not, in any way, obligate the city or county or the taxpayers residing within that political subdivision.

7. The industrial facility financed by industrial revenue bonds and the money earned by the facility remain under private control. This amendment does not create additional governmental bureaucracy to run the facility.

8. New industry and new jobs increase the tax base and lighten the tax burden for the present taxpayers.

Statements AGAINST

the Proposed Amendment

1. Money directed to industrial revenue bond issues tends to dry up investment funds available for municipal bonds making it more difficult for local units to issue municipal bonds for needed civic projects or financial emergencies.

2. Because the interest on the industrial revenue bonds is tax free to the federal and state levels, the bonds shift the tax burden from the business entities and investors to the general taxpayer.

3. The itemized uses for bonds in this amendment are too restrictive because this type of bond cannot be issued for producing electrical energy or establishing retail stores.

4. Idaho has been one of the fastest growing states for the past decade. Idaho may not need industrial revenue bond capability to attract new industry.

S.J.R. No. 110

Section 4, Article XI of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is repealed and Article XI of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is amended by the addition thereto of a NEW SECTION, to be known and designated as Section 4, Article XI of the Constitution of the State of Idaho, and to read as follows:

SECTION 4. CUMULATIVE VOTING. The Legislature shall not prohibit corporations from electing directors by cumulative voting.

The question to be submitted to the electors of the State of Idaho at the next general election shall be as follows:

"Shall Section 4 of Article XI of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be repealed and shall Article XI of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended by the addition of a new Section 4, Article XI, to provide that the Legislature shall not prohibit corporations from electing directors by cumulative voting?"

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S STATEMENT OF MEANING AND PURPOSE

S.J.R. No. 110

Meaning and Purpose

The purpose of this proposed amendment to Article XI, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is, by repeal of the present Section 4, Article XI, and the enactment of a new Section 4, Article XI, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho, to remove the existing prohibition against issuing common or preferred stock to corporations and to allow the Legislature to amend law to give corporations a choice between cumulative voting and straight voting in the election of directors. Cumulative voting means each shareholder is entitled to votes equal to the number of his shares multiplied by the number of directors to be elected; the shareholder may cast all his votes for one candidate or distribute them as he sees fit.

Effect of Adoption

If this amendment is adopted, corporations will be able to create and issue non-voting common stock which is presently very subtlely prohibited by the wording in Section 4, Article XI, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho. Non-voting common stock allows owners of a corporation to transfer an equity interest to others (children or employees, for example) without giving up management control. The amendment will also empower the Legislature to decide whether cumulative voting in the election of corporate directors, which is now mandatory, should be mandatory or optional.

Statements FOR

the Proposed Amendment

1. In some instances the death of the parents of a family-owned farm, ranch or business forces the heirs to sell the enterprise to pay federal estate taxes. Adoption of the amendment will give family-owned enterprises a chance to incorporate or recapitalize, providing a means for passing the equity to descendants in tax-free gifts, while the parents retain management control and an income.

2. The ability to issue non-voting common stock will give corporate management a means to let employees participate in the profits of the company without involving them in ownership decisions.

3. Under existing Constitutional requirements, Idaho corporations are required to use cumulative voting in the election of directors. Consequently, many businesses now incorporate in other states to avoid this requirement. This results in costly inconveniences to the businesses and lost revenue to Idaho's economy. Adoption of this amendment will permit the Legislature to amend law to give corporate organizers a choice between straight and cumulative voting, a choice currently enjoyed in nearly all other states. This will reduce business costs and generate additional revenue for Idaho.

4. Existing laws governing agricultural cooperatives and Idaho insurance companies allow for staggering the terms of members of a board of directors. There is a significant question whether those laws are constitutional. Adoption of this amendment will remove that question.

Statements AGAINST

the Proposed Amendment

1. The issuance of non-voting common stock will restrict the vote of those stockholders, and give them no legal voice in the management decisions and control of a corporation.

2. Adoption of this amendment could make management of a corporation less responsive to minority interests.

H.J.R. No. 18

Section 8, Article IX, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is amended to read as follows:

SECTION 8. LOCATION AND DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC LANDS. It shall be the duty of the state board of land commissioners to provide for the location, protection, sale or rental of all the lands heretofore, or which may hereafter be granted to or acquired by the state by or from the general government, under such regulations as may be prescribed, by law, and in such manner as will secure the maximum possible amount therefor long term financial return to the institution to which granted or to the state if not specifically granted; provided, that no school state lands shall be sold for less than ~~ten dollars per acre~~ the appraised price. No law shall ever be passed by the legislature granting any privileges to persons who may have settled upon any such public lands, after the date of the survey thereof by the general government, by which the amount to be derived by the sale, or other disposition of such lands, shall be diminished, directly or indirectly. The legislature shall, at the earliest practicable period, provide by law that the general grants of land made by congress to this state shall be judiciously located and carefully preserved and held in trust, subject to disposal at public auction for the use and benefit of the respective object for which said grants of land were made, and the legislature shall provide for the sale of said lands from time to time and for the sale of timber on said lands and for the faithful application of the proceeds thereof in accordance with the terms of said grants; provided, that not to exceed one hundred sections of school state lands shall be sold in any one year, and to be sold in subdivisions of not to exceed three hundred and twenty acres of land to any one individual, company or corporation. The state shall not have power to authorize the state board of land commissioners to exchange granted or acquired lands of the state on an equal value basis for other lands under agreement with the United States, and units of government, corporations, companies, individuals, or combinations thereof.

The question to be submitted to the electors of the State of Idaho at the next general election shall be as follows:

"Shall Section 8, Article IX, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended to require that endowment lands be managed to secure the maximum long term financial return for the institution to which granted; to provide that acquired lands be managed to secure the maximum long term financial return to the state; to prohibit the sale of state lands for less than the appraised price; and to authorize the exchange of state lands on an equal value basis?"

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S STATEMENT OF MEANING AND PURPOSE

H.J.R. No. 18

Meaning and Purpose

The purpose of this proposed amendment to Section 8, Article IX, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to require the State Board of Land Commissioners to manage endowment lands and other lands acquired by the State of Idaho from the United States government for the maximum long term financial return to the institution of state lands for less than the appraised price of those lands, and to authorize the exchange of state lands for other lands on an equal value basis with private and governmental entities.

Effect of Adoption

If this amendment is adopted, the constitutional standard for managing endowment and other lands granted to or acquired by the State of Idaho from the federal government will change. At present, endowment lands are managed to "secure the maximum possible amount therefor." This amendment will change that standard and require management to secure the "maximum long term financial return." This amendment will also add a constitutional standard for sales and exchanges of state lands.

Statements FOR

the Proposed Amendment

1. This amendment will formally spell out in the State Constitution a management practice that the State Board of Land Commissioners uses in managing the State's endowment lands. The State Board of Land Commissioners manages the endowment lands to receive the maximum long-term financial return instead of the short-term benefit.

2. The maximum long-term financial return to the State of Idaho from the management of state-owned lands could be significantly different than the maximum possible amount received from the lands. Requiring that the Board of Land Commissioners manage lands to receive the maximum amount of return over a period of years will promote efficient, cost-effective far-sighted management practices, and allow the State of Idaho to realize the maximum financial return possible from the sale or rental of its lands.

3. By providing that state lands shall not be sold for less than the appraised price, the State of Idaho will avoid subsidizing individuals or institutions by selling lands for less than the appraised price when the sale of particular lands generates little interest or few bidders.

4. The provision allowing exchanges of state lands on an equal value basis for lands owned by entities other than the State of Idaho will allow the State Board of Land Commissioners to exchange lands so that blocks of land could be put together for wildlife management, parks, recreations areas or resound, development which otherwise might not occur. Lands received through these exchanges must be equal in value to the lands given up.

Statements AGAINST

the Proposed Amendment

1. This proposed amendment is unnecessary as the State Board of Land Commissioners now administers the State's endowment lands in a manner to secure the maximum long term financial return to the Institution for which they are granted. It is provided by statute that the State Board of Land Commissioners may not sell state lands under bid for less than the minimum price set by the board. This has traditionally been for at least the appraised price. It is statutorily provided that the State Board of Land Commissioners may exchange state lands on an equal basis with private and governmental entities.

2. While it is not the intent of the amendment, wording in this amendment may preclude the State of Idaho from acquiring land from the federal government and converting it to a park or wildlife refuge if that would not secure the maximum long term financial return to the State. This could prevent the State of Idaho from acquiring land from the federal government and converting that land into a state park or a fish and game preserve if that use does not secure the maximum long-term financial return to the State of Idaho.

3. This amendment substitutes the phrase "maximum long-term financial return" for a phrase that has been interpreted by the courts. This substitution may eliminate nearly a century of case law regarding the State's endowment lands. Also, the phrase "maximum long-term financial return" is highly ambiguous.

4. While not the intent of the amendment, the wording of this proposed amendment could possibly endanger certain existing state parks and wildlife refuges which had been granted to the State of Idaho by the United States government. Lands containing certain state parks and wildlife refuges were granted to the State of Idaho by the United States specifically for use as parks or wildlife refuges. If a court were to find that the use of these lands as state parks or wildlife refuges is not securing the maximum long-term financial return to the State and hence in violation of the State Constitution, title to the lands could revert to the United States Government.

H.J.R. No. 15

Section 18, Article V, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is amended to read as follows:

SECTION 18. PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS — TERM OF OFFICE — QUALIFICATIONS. A prosecuting attorney shall be elected for each organized county in this state, by the qualified electors of such county, and shall hold office for the term of, two years, and commencing with the general election in 1984 shall hold office for the term of four years, and shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by law; he shall be a practicing attorney at law, and a resident and elector of the county for which he is elected. He shall receive such compensation for services as may be fixed by law.

The question to be submitted to the electors of the State of Idaho at the next general election shall be as follows:

"Shall Section 18, Article V, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended to provide for a term of four years commencing in 1984 for the prosecuting attorney of a county?"

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S STATEMENT OF MEANING AND PURPOSE

H.J.R. No. 15

Meaning and Purpose

The purpose of this proposed amendment to Section 18, Article V, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to provide a four year term for county prosecuting attorneys instead of the present two year term.

Effect of Adoption

If this amendment is adopted, the term of office of a prosecuting attorney will be changed from two years to four years, commencing with the general election in 1984.

Statements FOR

the Proposed Amendment

1. The longer term of office will reduce the high turnover rate in the office and thereby increase the stability of the criminal justice system by providing more continuity.

2. The longer term will encourage attorneys to make a field of criminal prosecution as a career rather than using the office as a two-year training period for private practice.

3. An additional two years are necessary for a prosecuting attorney to organize the office to function at peak effectiveness.

4. The longer term will encourage more experienced attorneys to seek the office, since experienced attorneys are rather hesitant to risk their private practices for a position that may last only two years.

5. Almost all of the other county elective offices are four-year terms; this amendment will make the prosecuting attorney's term consistent with other county offices.

Statements AGAINST

the Proposed Amendment

1. The change to a four year term will have a tendency to make the office of prosecuting attorney too political.

2. The present two year term provides a good "probationary" period for public evaluation of the prosecuting attorney.

S.J.R. No. 112

Section 7, Article I, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is amended to read as follows:

SECTION 7. RIGHT TO TRIAL BY

LEGAL NOTICE LEGAL NOTICE LEGAL NOTICE

JURY. The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate; but in civil actions, three-fourths of the jury may render a verdict, and the legislature may provide that in all cases of misdemeanors five-sixths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases not amounting to felony, by the consent of both all parties, expressed in open court, and in civil actions by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil actions the jury may consist of twelve or of any number less than twelve upon which the parties may agree in open court. Provided, that in cases of misdemeanor and in civil actions within the jurisdiction of any court inferior to the district court, whether such case or action be tried in such inferior court or in district court, the jury shall consist of not more than six.

The question to be submitted to the electors of the State of Idaho at the next general election shall be as follows:

"Shall Section 7, Article I, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended to provide for waiver of jury trials in felony criminal cases when consented to by all parties in open court?"

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL'S STATEMENT OF MEANING AND PURPOSE
S.J.R. No. 112

Meaning and Purpose

The purpose of this proposed amendment to Section 7, Article I, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to permit waiver of jury trials in felony criminal cases when consented to by all parties in open court.

Effect of Adoption

If this amendment is adopted, a defendant who pleads not guilty to a felony charge will be allowed to waive a jury trial and have his case tried before the court without a jury.

Statements FOR the Proposed Amendment

1. This amendment does not affect a citizen's right to a jury trial; the right to a jury trial is still guaranteed.

2. Defendants in misdemeanor actions presently have the right to waive a jury trial; this amendment will extend the same right to felony actions.

3. Occasionally, the only reason for proceeding with a jury trial is to preserve an appealable issue, such as a motion to suppress evidence. In such instances the jury trial is essentially a waste of time because the defendant's guilt is clear, but the trial must be held so that an appeal can be taken to a higher court.

4. Allowing waiver of jury trials will result in significant savings in the operation of the courts.

Statements AGAINST the Proposed Amendment

1. Particularly in felony cases, community standards should be weighed by laymen to determine innocence or guilt. Eliminating jury trials in felony cases will further reduce citizen participation in the justice system.

2. The chance of a judge and a prosecuting attorney acting to "pressure" a defendant into waiving a jury trial will be a real danger if this amendment is adopted.

THE ACES® BOBBY WOLFF

"No man is happy without a delusion of some kind. Delusions are as necessary to our happiness as realities." — Cristian Bovee.

In today's tricky game, declarer's heart weakness is the obvious problem. Buffing his small hearts in dummy is not the answer, it's a delusion. Here's how Seymon Deutsch of Laredo, Tex., timed the play to reel in 10 elusive tricks.

East won dummy's club queen with his ace and returned the jack, hoping that West could ruff. Two clubs, a trump and a heart trick would net a quick plus score.

Dummy's club king won as declarer discarded. a heart and it was time for a crucial decision: Should Seymon try to ruff his remaining low hearts?

Had he done so, he would have lost the game. A heart to his ace and a heart ruff would survive. But a diamond to the queen and another heart ruff would not. East would overruff with the trump jack and,the defense would score three trumps and the ace of clubs.

Seymon refused the tempting heart ruffs and led a trump to his nine after winning the second club in dummy. West's diamond exit was won by dummy's 10 and the ace of trumps was played. Seymon now ran dummy's diamonds to discard a second heart (West could ruff in at his own pleasure) and the heart ace and a heart ruff in dummy added up to a comfortable 10 tricks.

The ruffing line is not always the shortest distance between two points.
